Homeless present even in Henderson

DARRIN PHEGLEY / THE GLEANER

"She'll come in with three or four bags and it always goes through your mind... that's all she has?" The Shelter for Women and Children manager Angela Nix said recounting the first thing that comes to her mind when thinking about homelessness.

Local shelters often at capacity

It was mid-September when Ashley, a Henderson resident, was searching for a place to sleep.

"I didn't want to go home because there (were) drugs in the house," said the middle-aged mother and grandmother. "So I went to a church and slept on a pew ... I didn't have any place to go. I didn't know where to go where I (wouldn't) get beaten up."

Ashley, which isn't her real name, said she contacted a local shelter, but it was at capacity.

"I've tried to sleep in (a) shed, but it's too cold," she said.

Ashley isn't alone.

Michelle, also of Henderson, said she lived in her car from November to around February, "before a shelter became available."

"I was pregnant," she said.

With no beds available in Henderson, Michelle said she was finally placed in a shelter in Owensboro. Shortly thereafter, Michelle gave birth and left Kentucky.

When she returned to Kentucky, she married, but then circumstances were such that Michelle said she and her husband found themselves "on the streets."

Family members are caring for her child, she said.

Michelle and husband, Eric, — not their real names — said that during their time among Henderson's homeless, they would join others in sleeping wherever they could, including the backyards of abandoned houses, unlocked vehicles and under bridges.

Nix, manager of The Shelter for Women and Children.

"(Homelessness) is bigger than I ever imagined," she said. "Before I (worked) here, I didn't have a concept about it. It's a huge problem, even for a little town like Henderson."

Officials with the Kentucky Housing Corporation (KHC) said that a census of the homeless is taken every two years.

The most recent figure for the homeless population in Henderson County was obtained in 2010, according to Charla Jackson Peter, director of communications with the KHC. At that time, the total of homeless here was numbered at 49.

Peter said the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development requires a count of the homeless population every other year.

"For the years that HUD requires the count, KHC works with regional and state partners, as well as volunteers, to go out into each community and count the homeless where they stay to include homeless shelters, streets, and places not meant for human habitation," Peter said. "Having volunteers who are willing to go out into the community and conduct the surveys ... are critical in getting the best count. These volunteers receive training on how to conduct the survey. For the other years, KHC conducts a shelter count only. These counts, unfortunately, only give us a snap-

Turkey Trot tradition is great way to catch up

By Beth Smith

At the signal, roughly 600 people set off down Main Street Thursday morning as part of Henderson's annual Thanksgiving Day Turkey Trot.

Some ran the 5K route, some walked. Some were pulled along by their excited dogs. Others pushed baby strollers. There was even a Radio Flyer red wagon being powered by an accommodating adult and occupied by a perfectly content child.

The day was gorgeous and the Turkey Trotters were ready to enjoy it.

Owensboro resident, Meg Williams, 34, is spending her first Thanksgiving in this area. She and her family recently moved to western Kentucky from Lexington.

Williams decided to kick off this Thanksgiving with her first Turkey Trot.

"I like to run on Thanksgiving," she said. "It's something to get the day started."

Husband, Brant Williams, 34, and son, Davis, 6, were there to cheer her on.

After completing the run, Meg Williams said she was, "going to roast my turkey."

"We'll watch the pa-

Participants took off along Main Street in front of the Presbyterian Church Thursday morning. The annual Thanksgiving Day event grows every year. Ellen Redding, one of the organizers, said the first year they asked participants to bring canned goods, then over the years that grew into giving proceeds to various charities. For the last two years any money collected by T-shirt sales or donations goes to the Brain Injury Adventure Camp.

Families round out Thanksgiving at circus

Evansville's annual show doesn't disappoint

EVANSVILLE — They were every where at the 79th Hadi Shrine Circus on Thursday — families enjoying a Thanksgiving tradition just as time-honored as gobbling turkey and watching football games in a tryptophan-induced stupor.

Nathan Vaughan has been coming to the circus with his mother, Lisa, for his entire life. Nathan is just 3, so that would be since 2009.

Lisa Vaughan, a stay-at-home mother in Evansville, said the annual event has already become a happy expectation for Nathan.

"My husband is an emergency room physician and he works all holidays, so this is a family tradition for Nathan and me," Vaughan said as the pair watched the circus at the Ford Center. "That way my son has a tradition on Thanksgiving that we always do."

Nathan "likes the motorcycles," his mom disclosed as the youngster bounced on her knee.

"He likes watching them rev up and go around in a circle and doing all their tricks," she said.

The four-day, eight-show circus kicked off Thursday with organizers touting plenty of new acts and new lighting to keep event veterans like Nathan interested.

Brian Ball, public relations manager for the circus, talked of new acrobats, an acrobatic horse act, dog acts and plenty of dangerous-looking motorcycle stunts.

"It's going to be a fantastic show. We want everybody to come out and see it. If they came last year, they're going to see a whole different show this year," Ball said.

Ball cited a "brand new motorcy-

Sandy victims cheered by parade

■ ‘We’re thankful to be here and actually be a family and to feel like life’s a little normal today’

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Victims of Superstorm Sandy in New York and elsewhere in the Northeast were comforted Thursday by kinder weather, free holiday meals and — for some — front row seats to the annual Macy’s Thanksgiving Day Parade. “It means a lot,” said Karen Panetta, of the hard-hit Broad Channel section of Queens, as she sat in a special viewing section set aside for New Yorkers displaced by the storm. “We’re thankful to be here and actually be a family and to feel like life’s a little normal today,” she said. The popular Macy’s parade, attended by more than 3 million people and watched by 50 million on TV, included such giant balloons as Elf on a Shelf and Papa Smurf, a new version of Hello Kitty, Buzz Lightyear, Sailor Mickey Mouse and the Pillsbury Doughboy. Real-life stars included singer Carly Rae Jepsen and Rachel Crow of “The X Factor.” The young, and the young at heart, were delighted by the sight and sound of marching bands, performers and, of course, the giant balloons. The sunny weather quickly surpassed 50 degrees. Alan Batt and his 11-year-old twins, Kyto and Elina, took in the parade at the end of the route, well away from the crowd and seemingly too far away for a good view. But they had an advantage: Two tall stepladders they hauled over from their apartment eight blocks away — one for each twin. “We’re New Yorkers,” the 65-year-old Batt said. “We know what we’re doing.” With the height advantage, “I get to see everything!” Kyto said. At nearby Greeley Square, social worker Lowell Herschberger, 40, of Brooklyn, sought in vain to tear his sons, 8-year-old Logan and 6-year-old Liam, from a foosball table set up in the tiny park as the balloons crept by on the near horizon. “Hey, guys — there’s Charlie Brown,” he said, pointing at the old standby balloon. The boys didn’t look up. “I guess they’re over it,” the father said with a shrug. Mayor Michael Bloomberg was reflective Thursday as he praised police, firefighters, armed services personnel, sanitation workers and volunteers involved in the storm response. His office was coordinating the distribution of 26,500 meals at 30 sites in neighborhoods affected by Sandy, and other organizations also were pitching in. The disaster zones on Staten Island were flooded — this time with food and volunteers from Glen Rock, N.J. organized using social media. “We had three carloads of food,” said volunteer Beth Fernandez. “The whole town of Glen Rock pitched in. ... It’s really cool. It’s my best, my favorite Thanksgiving ever.” On Long Island, the Long Beach nonprofit Surf For All hosted a Thanksgiving event that fed 1,200 people. Carol Gross, 72, a Long Beach native, said she went to volunteer but was turned away because of a surplus of helpers. “A lot of people like me, old-timers, we’ve never seen anything like this horror,” she said, recalling the destruction. Gross’ brother, Jerry, who moved to Arizona in the 1960s, was stunned by what he saw when he returned for Thanksgiving. “To come back and see the boardwalk all devastated like it is, it’s like going to Manhattan and finding Times Square gone,” he said. George Alvarez, whose Toms River, N.J., home suffered moderate damage when Sandy hit the coast, said his family usually does “the traditional big dinner” on Thanksgiving. But this year, they chose to attend a community dinner held at an area church. “This storm not only impacted us, it impacted a lot of our friends, our community, our psyche,” Alvarez said shortly before his family headed out for their meal. “We could have had our usual dinner here at home, but this year it felt like we should be with others who are experiencing the same concerns we are. We made it through this devastating storm, and that’s something to celebrate.”

Sharing faith, blessings

The national UCC church began an initiative called Faith In for participating UCC churches to share their faith and help their community. The next local project will be Zion UCC's long-standing Charity Luncheon and Bake Sale on Dec. 7.

Pastor Deborah McBride said the project, which is a greater United Church of Christ initiative, is a first for the Henderson congregation. She said the purpose is to reach out to those who can't travel to family or friends for Thanksgiving and for those who are in need. We "wanted to share our faith and our blessings," Payne said.

Advocates tout hemp's economic potential in Kentucky

By Bruce Schreiner
Associated Press

LOUISVILLE—For a century, G.F. Vaughan Tobacco Inc. has been in the business of processing tobacco — a once-lucrative operation whose heyday is long past, like the rest of Kentucky's burley sector. So the company is looking for something new.

One possibility is industrial hemp, an outlawed cousin of marijuana that once was a staple of Kentucky agriculture. The long-dormant hemp crop with a multitude of uses could make a comeback if some prominent Kentucky politicians get their way.

Wanting to be ready if production is legalized, Vaughan executives are planning a trip to Canada for an inside look at how the tall, leafy plant is processed north of the border, where hemp has taken root as a cash crop.

The question on their minds is whether Vaughan's equipment could be adapted to process hemp.

"Our tobacco business is not what it used to be and we've got a lot of capacity here that's unused," said Conrad Whitaker, president of the Lexington-based Vaughan. "We'd like to have a product that we could fill in with."

Christian concert set for Evansville

Christian Hip Hop artist KB will perform at a family-friendly concert on Tuesday, Nov. 27, at the YMCA in Downtown Evansville.

The event will include a guest appearance by Christian Rapper Sean Little, one of many celebrities who have told their life story through the I Am Second movement.

The concert will begin at 6:30 p.m.; doors will open at 5:30 p.m. Tickets are $3 each and may be purchased at the Y Downtown, 222 NW 6th St., or the Dunigan Family Y located at 6846 Oak Grove Road next to the east side Lowe's in Evansville.

KB is the leader of Christian hip-hop group HGA. Also signed as a solo artist with Reach Records, KB's debut solo album, "Weight & Glory," was released in July 2012.

Christian Rapper Sean Little, also a digital musician, released his most recent CD in March 2012. He is a representative of I am Second, a movement meant to inspire people of all kinds to live for God and for others.

For more information, contact the Y Downtown at 812-423-9622 or Dunigan Family Y at 812-401-9622.

Judge orders man to repay charity

LOUISVILLE — A federal prosecutor says a Kentucky man who pleaded guilty to fraud and money laundering for taking money from a children's charity recently bought a new home in Louisville with cash.

Paul Barth was sentenced on Monday to three years and five months in prison and ordered to pay nearly $200,000 in restitution to the WHAS Crusade for Children and the McMahan Fire Protection District where he previously served as chief.

The Courier-Journal reported Wednesday that Barth recently sold a Florida condo and that he and his wife bought a home in Louisville last month with $266,500 in cash.

U.S. Attorney David Hale said in a statement that Barth should have paid the restitution when he had cash, instead of buying another home.

"It is deplorable that after admitting guilt and even asking the public for forgiveness, Mr. Barth still put his personal interests ahead of his victims," Hale said.

Man pleads guilty to marijuana charges

BOWLINGGREEN—A southern Kentucky man believed to be the leader of a conspiracy to grow over 1,200 marijuana plants at his home pleaded guilty this week in federal court.

According to WBKO-TV in Bowling Green, 70-year-old Dallas Norris pleaded guilty to manufacturing and distributing a controlled substance, money laundering and possession of firearms by a felon.

Prosecutors said Norris and 10 co-defendants operated a sophisticated marijuana grow operation that was discovered by Kentucky State Police at his Glasgow home last November.

A police investigation determined that the operation started in 2008 and was producing seven to 10 pounds of marijuana about every two weeks.

U.K. cutting costs with energy project

LEXINGTON—Officials at the University of Kentucky say an energy-savings project has cut costs at the school by more than $2 million annually.

Some of the changes made include a $16.2 million upgrade on mechanical systems; $6.8 million on lighting; and $1.9 million to conserve water through means such as low-flush toilets.

The Lexington Herald-Leader reports that U.K. has saved almost 14 million kilowatt hours of electricity and 37.6 million gallons of water and has reduced the amount of carbon dioxide released into the air by 23,291 tons each year.

Meth effects horrendous, far reaching

It is no secret that drug abuse affects more than just the user — friends, family, employers, the people the addicts rip off to support their habit. But methamphetamine use is perhaps unique in that its negative side effects extend far beyond the user to innocent strangers.

For hard-core users, meth addiction, with its brutal physical ravages, is almost like a backward trip through evolution. But even after the addict moves on, the residue from meth use or, worse, its manufacture lingers silently on with toxic levels of contamination, according to Don Wade of Scripps Howard News Service.

A meth contaminated residence or car can cause severe sinus headaches, nosebleeds, trouble breathing, dry mouth and mouth sores, particularly in children. The Drug Enforcement Administration maintains a registry of more than 21,000 addresses that were once meth labs, but at the current state of public awareness this is not a check the typical homebuyer thinks of making.

be as small as a grain of sand in the palm of the hand. Twenty-eight states have specified meth-contamination disclosure laws for houses; 17 for apartment rentals; eight for vehicles; and 14 for renting a hotel room. Meth contamination then is still very much a matter of buyer beware.

The appeal of meth is an intense euphoria. For “one pot” or “shake-and-bake” meth chefs, all it takes is the popular cold medicine pseudoephedrine, a 2-liter soda bottle and a few readily available chemicals. The process, however, can be particularly combustible and result in explosions, fires and gruesome burn injuries, with resulting treatment of uninsured drug-makers often charged to the taxpayer.

Now meth production has become a big enough business to attract the Mexican drug cartels with their economies of scale and relatively safe havens for production in Mexico. The DEA estimates 80 percent of meth destined for American streets comes from Mexico.

Attempts to crack down on meth through the law have been scatter shot. A federal law requires that pseudoephedrine, which has legitimate uses for asthma and cold sufferers, be kept behind the counter and that all purchases be recorded. Only two states, Oregon and Mississippi, require a doctor's prescription. Laws in 16 other states were defeated, largely because of lobbying by the over-the-counter drug industry.

Barring a significant breakthrough in the culture, law enforcement or the manufacture of pseudoephedrine, University of Texas senior research scientist Jane Maxwell may unfortunately be right in her assessment: “It's never going away. It's Whac-A-Mole.”

Take closer look at facts of Benghazi

MARTIN SCHRAM

intelligence info. But it really isn't news — because it isn't new.

We knew it in mid-October (or could have known it if we'd found where to read it). And we could have known it just after the Benghazi tragedy. For it was there to be journalistically gathered and reported, just like America's intelligence specialists were assumed to be doing.

On the evening of Oct. 15, the website of what I consider America's finest newspaper, The New York Times, published a terrific story, datelined Cairo, by David D. Kirkpatrick. It presented info about the Benghazi attackers that seemed like what CIA and other intel intelligentsia must have gathered at the time of the attack (and after) and funneled to decision-makers including President Barack Obama.

But there are two reasons you may not have thought this fact-filled report was big front-page news: First, on the website and in the newspaper the next morning, it was labeled “Memo from the Middle East” and had an un-newsly analytical lead. Second, the next morning's newspaper ran it not on Page 1 but A6.

But read the facts presented in the story and it will strike you as newsworthy even now. Especially after you've heard months of accusations from Republicans that the White House, the president and United Nations Ambassador Susan Rice were wrong to keep suggesting it may have started as a protest over an anti-Muslim video.

Kirkpatrick's news-filled story quoted interviews with Libyans who were at the consulate while the attack was under way, and the reporting of a Libyan journalist who worked for The Times. It reported:

1. The armed attackers were members of a local Islamist militant group, Ansar al-Shariah, which is aligned with al-Qaida. Some identified themselves as members of this group.
 2. The armed fighters didn't come to protest, they came to attack — and did.
 3. But the fighters also said during the attack they were angry at the video. Some gave it as their reason for attacking.
- “To Libyans who witnessed the assault and know the attackers, there is little doubt what occurred: a well-known group of local Islamist militants struck without any warning or protest, and they did it in retaliation for the video,” The Times article reported.

But back in the USA, some Republican partisans quickly transformed the Benghazi tragedy into political attack theater.

The Benghazi attackers' outspoken anger over the video could explain why, for days, the CIA and other U.S. intelligence didn't rule out the possibility it all began as an anti-video protest — even though the terrorists were well armed.

Indeed, the CIA's daily briefing to the president reportedly didn't rule out that possibility for some time.

If the CIA vacuums had collected what The Times gathered, those vehement Republican denunciations probably should have been aimed not at Obama, et al, but at their hero, then-CIA Director David Petraeus.

And finally: Ask yourself how Washington's angry venting might have been changed if, on Oct. 16, The New York Times had treated Kirkpatrick's excellent report as a big hard news story, displayed in the upper right-hand corner of its front page for all to see.

From The Kentucky New Era:

For many years, the Kentucky General Assembly has been reluctant to take the logical steps necessary to eliminate the elected office of constable. Even lawmakers who agreed the office is outdated, and sometimes dangerous, were unwilling to risk the political fight over abolishing the office.

A report released earlier this month by the Kentucky Law Enforcement Council could give lawmakers the push they need to do away with constables. Or it should.

Justice and Public Safety Secretary J. Michael Brown said he directed the Department of Criminal Justice Training to look at whether constables have a viable role in Kentucky.

OTHER VIEWS

Simply by winning election, constables are granted law enforcement authority similar to sheriff's deputies. They have arrest powers and may carry firearms, although there is no requirement for any law enforcement training. Most constables are used by sheriff's departments to assist with traffic control at large public events or to assist in search or rescue operations. Some constables also deliver court papers, which helps professionally trained deputies devote more time to law enforcement duties. Constables are elected from a geographic district. They are not paid a salary, but they can earn fees for delivering court papers.

Brown noted there are liabilities in allowing constables to perform law enforcement duties. The report recommends the office be eliminated or the law enforcement powers of constables be restricted.

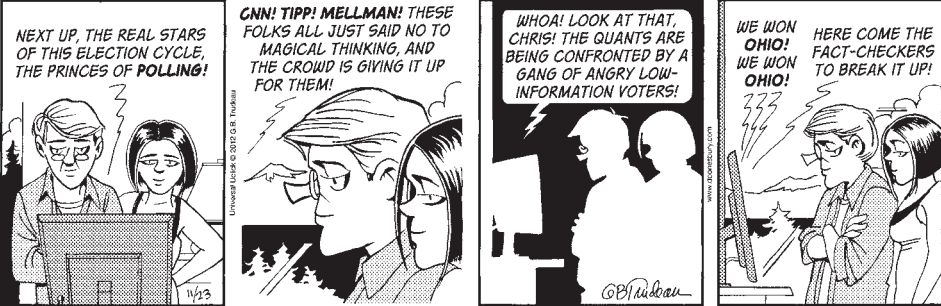

In an editorial last December, we argued in favor of a pre-filed bill from Sen.

Julie Denton, R-Louisville, to put a constitutional amendment on the ballot to abolish the position of constable. The legislation failed.

The law enforcement council's report follows several notable criminal cases involving constables. For example, a Jefferson County constable had to resign this fall as part of a plea agreement in court after he admitted to shooting at a suspected shoplifter in a store's parking lot.

If lawmakers remain reluctant to protect citizens from free-lancing cops, it's time for more county officials to pressure the General Assembly on this issue....

Salesman held in 3 N.Y. deaths

By Tom Hays
Associated Press

NEW YORK — A garment salesman accused of systematically shooting three shopkeepers to death as they worked alone in their clothing stores was held without bail Thursday.

Salvatore Perrone, who was held after his initial Brooklyn court appearance on murder charges, denies killing anyone, his lawyer said.

Attorney Ken Jones, who represented Perrone only for the arraignment and hadn't spent that much time with him, said his client shows no remorse and appears "as though he could have some mental-health issues."

Perrone, of Staten Island, will be assigned another lawyer when he returns to court Tuesday, prosecutors said.

Perrone was taken into custody Wednesday in the suspected serial killings, which scores of detectives were investigating. A pharmacy worker recognized Perrone, 63, as the balding man shown in surveillance footage leaving the scene of the most recent shooting, Nov. 16, with a duffel bag, police said.

Another shopkeeper came forward and said Perrone had gone into his store and questioned him about whether he worked alone and when he closed, police Commissioner Raymond Kelly said.

"It's reasonable to assume he was going to keep doing this, and, by arresting him, we saved lives," Kelly said.

Detectives said they found the duffel bag at Perrone's girlfriend's home. Inside, they said, was a sawed-off rifle used in the killings, along with .22-caliber ammunition, black gloves, women's clothing, a bloody knife and a bottle of bleach.

Perrone's fingerprint was lifted from the murder weapon, Kelly said.

Perrone, a Brooklyn native, is divorced and lives with his girlfriend. He went store to store trying to sell clothing, police said, but it was unclear if he had tried to sell to any of the victims.

Jockeying to replace Jackson Jr. begins

CHICAGO — The jockeying to replace Jesse Jackson Jr. began before the ink was dry on the former congressman's resignation letter.

Among those expressing an interest: Chicago aldermen, a former NFL linebacker and a defense attorney who represented R&B singer R. Kelly and former Gov. Rod Blagojevich.

But as the field of would-be successors grows to a dozen or more names — one of whom may be another member of the Jackson family — party leaders and political analysts say a stampede of candidates could pose risks for the Democratic stronghold. Spread the field of candidates too thin, they say, and it becomes easier for a more conservative candidate — or anyone else party leaders don't want — to pull off a win.

The possibility so worried Democratic Congressman Bobby Rush, a close friend of the Jacksons, that within hours of the resignation he had these words for anyone thinking of running: "Cool your jets."

Dwarf planet has no atmosphere

WASHINGTON — Astronomers say Pluto's icy more distant sister seems even more alien than thought because it doesn't have an atmosphere.

Scientists gained that bit of new knowledge about the dwarf planet Makemake by measuring light from data gathered by several large telescopes. Researchers report in the journal Nature that the small planet may simply have some pockets of atmosphere from methane ice turning into gas.

Makemake is one of four dwarf planets in our solar system beyond Neptune. It is so far from the sun its temperature is about 400 degrees below zero. Scientists compare it to getting warmth from a 100-watt light bulb 33 feet away. It was discovered in 2005.

5 people die in apartment fire

WHEATON — Five people, including a child, died after a fire broke out early Thursday at an apartment building in southwest Missouri, authorities said.

Bob Lombard, chief of the Wheaton Fire Department, told The Associated Press that the fire was reported about 3:20 a.m. Fire crews arrived at the apartment within minutes of getting the call and found the victims in two separate units at the building. The fire was fully involved when firefighters arrived from the fire station located a few blocks away, Lombard said.

"We lost five people," Lombard said. Two adults and the child were found in one apartment and the two other adults were found in a nearby apartment in the eight-story building, he said.

The victims' identities hadn't been released, and the cause of the fire was under investigation, Lombard said.

Wheaton is located about 70 miles southwest of Springfield and has about 700 residents.

The Red Cross of Southern Missouri said it was providing 16 people with emergency lodging, food and clothing. It has opened five cases for financial assistance.

Study: Pregnant teens need better school support

By Kelli Kennedy
Associated Press

MIAMI — When 15-year-old Kali Gonzalez became pregnant, she maintained an A average.

She capitalized on an online school program for parenting students so she could stay home and take care of her baby during her junior year. She returned to school her senior year and graduated with honors in May.

But Gonzalez is a rare example of success among pregnant students. Schools across the country are divided over how to handle them, with some schools kicking them out or penalizing students for pregnancy-related absences. And many schools say they can't afford costly support programs, including tutoring, child care and transportation for teens who may live just a few miles from school but still too far to walk while pregnant or with a small child.

Nearly 400,000 girls and young women between 15 and 19 years old gave birth in 2010, a rate of 34 per 1,000, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Those statistics have led child advocates to push for greater adherence to a 1972 law that bans sex discrimination in federally funded education programs and activities, according to a new report by the National Women's Law Center.

Fatima Goss Graves, the center's vice president of education and employment, says offering pregnant teens extra support would ultimately save taxpayers money by helping them become financially independent and not dependent on welfare.

But budget cuts have eaten into such efforts.

California lawmakers slashed a successful program for such students in 2008, ruling it was no longer mandatory, and allowed school districts to use the money for other programs.

More than 100,000 pregnant and parenting students have participated in the program that helps them with classwork and connects them with social services. It boasted a 73 percent graduation rate in 2010 — close to the state's normal rate — and advocates said participants were less reliant on welfare and less likely to become pregnant again. That compares with several counties where only 30 percent of pregnant and parenting teens graduated.

Congo rebels battle over eastern town

GOMA — Congolese soldiers and rebel fighters battled for hours over the eastern town of Sake on Thursday, forcing thousands of people to flee as the militants seeking to overthrow the government vowed to push forward despite mounting international pressure.

Meanwhile, the leader of the rebel group known as M23 headed to neighboring Uganda where emergency talks were held this week between the presidents of Congo and its neighbors Uganda and Rwanda.

Fighting broke out Thursday just before noon in the town of Sake, which the rebels had seized Wednesday after capturing the strategic provincial capital of Goma, about 17 miles away.

Taliban suicide bomber kills 23

ISLAMABAD — A Taliban suicide bomber struck a Shiite Muslim procession near Pakistan's capital, killing 23 people in the latest of a series of bombings targeting Shiites during the holiest month of the year for the sect, officials said Thursday.

The bomber attacked the procession around midnight Wednesday in the city of Rawalpindi, located next to the capital, Islamabad, said Deeba Shahnaz, a state rescue official. At least 62 people were wounded by the blast, including six policemen. Eight of the dead and wounded were children, said Shahnaz.

Police tried to stop and search the bomber as he attempted to join the procession, but he ran past them and detonated his explosives, said senior police official Haseeb Shah. The attacker was also carrying grenades, some of which exploded, said Shah.

"I think the explosives combined with grenades caused the big loss," said Shah.

Local TV footage showed the scene of the bombing littered with body parts and smeared with blood. Shiites beat their heads and chests in anguish.

BBC chooses new director-general

LONDON — The BBC chose a former head of its news division Thursday to lead the broadcaster through a "long, hard look" at itself as it struggles to recover from a scandal stemming from its coverage of child sex abuse.

Tony Hall, currently chief executive of the Royal Opera House, will start his new job as BBC's new director-general in March, Chris Patten, chairman of the governing BBC Trust, said.

Hall, 61, worked at the BBC for 28 years, including a decade as director of news before taking the Royal Opera post in 2001. He succeeds George Entwistle, who resigned on Nov. 10 after just 54 difficult days as director-general.

The new director said the organization has had a "difficult few weeks," but would recover.

"This organization is an incredibly important part of what makes the United Kingdom what it is," he said. "And of course it matters not just to people in this country, but to tens of millions around the world too."

BEIRUT — Syrian rebels strengthened their hold Thursday on an oil-rich province bordering Iraq, activists said, capturing a key military base that was considered one of the last bastions for President Bashar Assad's loyalists in the strategic region.

The reported fall of the Mayadeen base, along with its stockpiles of artillery, caps a series of advances in Deir el-Zour including last week's seizure of a military airport.

The province borders on western Iraq. Syria's rebels enjoy strong support with the Sunni tribes of Iraq's west, and many Iraqis with combat experience from their own war are believed to have crossed to fight with their neighbor.

Rebel fighters also say that weapons seized when bases fall have been essential to their transformation from ragtag brigades into forces capable of challenging Assad's professional army.

Activist groups and a local fighter told The Associated Press the Mayadeen base was taken in the morning hours, after a three-week siege. The fighter spoke on condition of anonymity because of security concerns.

Violence also was reported in opposition strongholds around the capital Damascus and in the northern city of Aleppo, where government aircraft damaged one of the rebels' key field hospitals.

Rebels who have battled government forces for months to control Aleppo, Syria's economic hub, scored a major victory several days ago when they overran the nearby base of the regime's 46th Regiment. The unit was a pillar of the government's Aleppo garrison and its fall cuts a major supply line.

However, the regime has used its air power to dent rebel gains.

Government aircraft late Wednesday flattened a building next to Dar al-Shifa hospital, killing 15 people and badly damaging one of the last remaining sources of medical help for civilians in the city, activists said.

Once a private clinic run by a businessman said to be close to Assad, Dar al-Shifa became a field hospital run by volunteer doctors, nurses and aides united by their opposition to the regime.

They gave medical care to both civilians and rebels.

The facility has taken at least six direct shell hits in recent months, mostly affecting the upper floors. The seven-story hospital is only 400 to 500 yards from the front line in a neighborhood that is heavily shelled every day.

The warplanes turned the building adjacent to the hospital into a pile of rubble and sprayed shrapnel and debris into Dar al-Shifa itself, activists said.

Rami Abdul-Rahman, chief of the British-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, said at least 11 fighters were killed in the raid, in addition to a doctor, a young girl and two children who were on the street.

Another activist group, the Local Coordination Committees, confirmed the bombing and identified the doctor as Mohammad Qassem Agha.

The group said 40 people died in airstrikes in Aleppo on Wednesday, but did not say how many died in the hospital strike.

Videos posted online by activists showed the flattened building.

In Damascus, two mortar shells struck the upscale neighborhood of Mazzeh during the morning rush hour Thursday. An AP reporter said one of the shells set fire to a six-floor apartment in a residential building, seriously injuring one woman. The second mortar struck and damaged the first floor in a building across the street.

Downtown Damascus — the seat of Assad's power — has seen scores of car bombs and mortar attacks in recent months.

Mazzeh, home to a number of foreign embassies as well as homes of wealthy Syrians, including one exclusive compound housing members of the regime, has been targeted several times in the past few days.

"This is a residential area and there are no military bases here. So why are they targeting civilians?" said Nizar Hamdi, a 38-year-old owner of a computer center.

Powerful supermajorities elected to statehouses

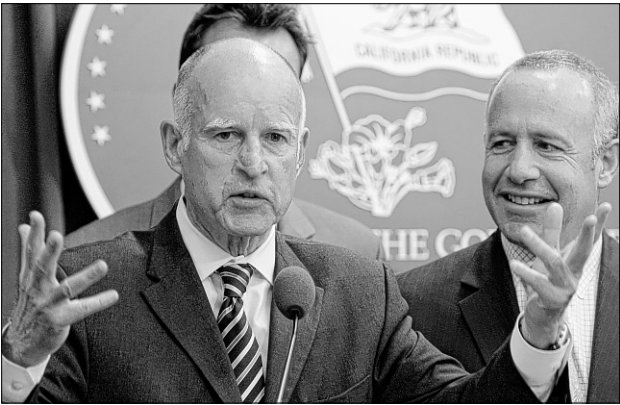

By David A. Lieb
Associated Press

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — There's a new superpower growing in the Great Plains and the South, where bulging Republican majorities in state capitols could dramatically cut taxes and change public education with barely a whimper of resistance from Democrats.

Contrast that with California, where voters have given Democrats a new dominance that could allow them to raise taxes and embrace same-sex marriage without regard to Republican objections.

If you thought the presidential election revealed the nation's political rifts, consider the outcomes in state legislatures. The vote also created a broader tier of powerful one-party governments that can act with no need for compromise. Half of state legislatures now have veto-proof majorities, up from 13 only four years ago, according to figures compiled for The Associated Press by the National Conference of State Legislatures.

All but three states — Iowa, Kentucky and New Hampshire — have one-party control of their legislatures, the highest mark since 1928.

The result could lead to stark differences in how people live and work.

“Usually, a partisan tide helps the same party across the country, but what we saw in this past election was the opposite of that — some states getting bluer and some states getting redder,” said Thad Kousser, an associate political science professor at the University of California-San Diego who focuses on state politics. As a result, “we’ll see increasing policy divergence across the states.”

Democrats in California gained their first supermajorities since 1883 in both the Assembly and Senate. Republicans captured total control of the North Carolina Capitol for the first time in more than a century. The GOP set a 147-year high mark in the Tennessee statehouse and won two-thirds majorities in the Missouri Legislature for the first time since the Civil War.

Republicans also gained or expanded supermajorities in places such as Indiana, Oklahoma and — if one independent caucuses with the GOP — Georgia. Democrats gained a supermajority in Illinois and built upon their dominance in places such as Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

If the parties make full use of their enlarged majorities, residents of similar-sized cities in different parts of the country could soon experience a virtual continental divide in their way of life.

In one state, businesses could pay little to no taxes, the result of policies intended to spur hiring. Public schools might function at a basics-only level, with parents free to use public money to send their children to private schools. Only the poorest of the poor adults could expect medical care from the government.

In another state, residents would pay higher taxes, and the government would inject billions of dollars into public education with the goal of creating a highly skilled workforce to attract businesses. A social safety net would exist for the poor, including working adults not even considered to be in poverty.

States already have different approaches to taxes, the economy and care for the poor, but they have been tempered by compromise. Now the middle ground may begin to disappear in favor of stark extremes.

Supermajorities can allow lawmakers to override governors’ vetoes, change tax rates, put constitutional amendments on the ballot, rewrite legislative rules and establish a quorum for business — all without any participation by the opposing party.

In Indiana, the new Republican supermajority can now pass bills even if House Democrats repeat the walkouts they’ve held the past two years to protest the consideration of so-called right-to-work laws limiting union powers. In Oklahoma, Republicans are expected to use their huge majorities to move to slash state income taxes after efforts last year fell short.

Indiana Democrats acknowledge there is little they can do.

“It’s deeply troubling that my party has fallen in this position and left our state, in my view, so ill-represented,” said Democratic Rep. Ed DeLaney of Indianapolis. “It’s a huge challenge.”

Unions flexed muscles in state campaigns

By Sam Hananel
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — From California to Maine, unions used their political muscle in the recent elections to help install Democratic governors, build labor-friendly majorities in state legislatures and defeat ballot initiatives against them.

The combination of union money and member mobilization helped Democrats take control of state legislatures in Maine and Minnesota.

In Michigan, voters repealed a law that allowed cities in financial distress to suspend collective bargaining contracts. But unions lost there on an effort to make collective bargaining rights a part of the state constitution.

vested major resources in state races where they have been fighting efforts by governors and state lawmakers to restrict bargaining rights or dilute union power.

The victories could mark a turnaround of sorts for unions nearly two years after Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker announced plans to strip teachers, nurses and other public employees of most collective bargaining rights. Walker, a Republican, justified the move as necessary to trim the state’s budget shortfall.

Since then, unions have been fighting dozens of measures around the country targeting labor rights. They failed earlier this year to recall Walker from office, but a judge has declared parts of the Wisconsin law unconstitutional.

It wasn’t all good news for unions on election night. They lost a first-of-its-kind ballot effort in Michigan that would have enshrined collective bargaining rights in the state constitution.

Unions saw the measure as a way to prevent Republicans from passing a right-to-work law that would have ended unions’ ability to collect fees from nonunion workers. Critics said it would cause the repeal of dozens of state laws and interfere with local officials trying to control their budgets. One union-backed group spent at least $6.5 million on TV ads supporting it.

Labor’s victories came at a steep cost. Unions and other Democratic interests poured at least $75 million into the effort to defeat California’s Proposition 32.

Unions are not so much thriving as surviving.

“Thanks to union dues, it’s a self-replenishing stream,” said Bill Whalen, a fellow at the conservative Hoover Institution. “They still have a sea of money to spend and they prove quite adept at winning political arguments.”

After playing defense in more than a dozen states for the past two years, unions see no other choice. Public employee unions now make up a majority of the nation’s 14.8 million union members, but they have taken a hit as state and local budgets shrink, forcing layoffs and cuts to salaries and pension benefits.

Next to winning Obama’s re-election, defeating Proposition 32 in California was labor’s top goal. Prohibiting unions from collecting money for political activities through paycheck deductions would have deprived them of tens of millions of dollars for donations to candidates and financing campaigns.

rade of course, and we’ll be watching football,” she said. “We’re going to hang out as a family.” People along the route, which took Turkey Trotters down Main Street, onto 12th Street and then to the new Riverwalk, came out of their houses to clap and cheer for participants and give them a little boost as the 5K challenge continued. Amy Wilson, formerly of Henderson, was accompanied by Bonnie and Clyde, her two black and white Boston terriers. Now living just outside of Chicago, Wilson said she was in town to spend Thanksgiving with her parents, Jim and Fay Wilson of Henderson. Amy Wilson said she participated in the Turkey Trot because it benefits the Brain Injury Adventure Camp. “It’s a charity that my mom supports,” she said. “We had every intention of doing it last year, but the weather didn’t cooperate.” Williams and Wilson were not the only non-Henderson residents to take advantage of the event. Ellen Redding, one of the event’s organizers, said people from North Carolina, South Carolina, California and Minnesota, were among those who had pre-registered for the trot. Redding, who along with Ginny Floyd and Ann Hodge coordinated the Turkey Trot activities, said people coming in for the Thanksgiving holiday wanted to participate in the 5K run/walk and help raise money for the BIAC. The Turkey Trot raised more than $5,000 for the camp on Thursday, she said. “We raised $5,000 last year, and this year, I think we made that and more,” she said. “I think it’s such a beautiful day,” Redding said. “(The Turkey Trot) is just so fun, and it’s family fun.” Redding said there are those who enjoy the thrill of the competition, but “mostly, people just want to talk to those they haven’t seen in a year.” After finishing the Turkey Trot, which is a tradition for the Redding family, Redding said she and her family would feast on another Thanksgiving tradition. “My grandmother made the best pies there ever were,” she said. “My tradition is to make homemade pies with my grandmother’s pie crust recipe.” Another big plus this Thanksgiving, she said, “I have all my boys home” for the holiday. Looking out at the crowd still milling around after the conclusion of the Turkey Trot, Redding said, “It was a beautiful day and everyone was so giving. Everybody looks so happy.” “(The Turkey Trot) is a great tradition,” she said. “Every year you can count on coming.”

shot of the homeless situation in our communities. Many of the homeless may not be counted if there are not volunteers helping to administer the surveys where the homeless stay.” The total of the homeless population is as ever changing as the people themselves, and not just in Henderson. In Evansville, the number of people who are homeless is around 450, based on the 2010 census numbers, according to officials working with the homeless there. “We’re staying full,” said Kimron Reising with United Caring Shelters. “We’re turning away between 10 and 12 a day.” When they can’t find a bed, Reising said, “(They) sleep in their cars, abandoned buildings, behind Dumpsters, in doorways ... any place they can find where they are relatively safe.” Most of those using the United Caring Shelters are from Henderson, Evansville or the surrounding area, Reising said. Being “from” someplace means “that either their last permanent address was here or they have family here,” Reising said. Where someone is “from” can be “difficult to define,” he said. Black Friday creeps into Thursday

By Anne D’innocenzio and Tom Krisher Associated Press

NEW YORK — The nation’s shoppers on Thursday put down the turkey to take advantage of Thanksgiving deals. Stores typically open in the wee hours of the morning on the day after Thanksgiving that’s named Black Friday because that’s when stores traditionally turn a profit for the year. But Black Friday openings have crept earlier and earlier over the past few years. Now, stores from Target to Toys R Us are opening their doors on Thanksgiving evening, hoping Americans will be willing to shop soon after they finish their pumpkin pie. Target Corp. is opening its doors at 9 p.m. on the holiday, three hours earlier than last year. Sears, which didn’t open on Thanksgiving last year, is opening at 8 p.m. on Thursday through 10 p.m. on Black Friday. Toys R Us will be opening at 8 p.m., an hour earlier than last year. And others such as Macy’s Inc. are opening at midnight on Black Friday. Retailers are hoping that the Thanksgiving openings will draw shoppers who prefer to head to stores after their turkey dinner rather than braving the crowds early the next morning. Overall, about 17 percent of shoppers plan to take advantage of Thanks-

Dora Hurtado waits in line at a Pembroke Pines, Fla., Toys-R-Us store late Thursday. While stores typically open in the wee hours of the morning on the day after Thanksgiving known as Black Friday, openings have crept earlier and earlier over the past few years.

giving hours, according to an International Council of Shopping Centers-Goldman Sachs survey of 1,000 consumers. Michael Prothero, 19, and Kenny Fullenlove, 20, even were willing to miss Thanksgiving dinner altogether for deals. They started camping out on Monday night outside a Best Buy store in Toledo, Ohio, which was slated to open at midnight. The friends, who were waiting to get 40-inch televisions, video games and a tablet computer, came early to make sure they got the deals advertised by Best Buy, even though the next person in line didn’t arrive until almost 24 hours later. “Better safe than sorry,” Prothero said. The Thanksgiving hours are an effort by stores to make shopping more convenient for Americans, who still face economic uncertainty. Many shoppers are worried about high unemployment and a package of tax increases and spending cuts known as the “fiscal cliff” that will take effect in January unless Congress passes a budget deal by then. At the same time, Americans have grown more comfortable shopping on websites such as Amazon.com, where they can get cheaper prices and buy from the comfort of their home or office cubicle. That has put pressure on brick-and-mortar stores, which can make up to 40 percent of their annual revenue during the two-month holiday shopping season, to compete. That’s becoming more difficult: the National Retail Federation, an industry trade group, estimates that overall sales in November and December will rise 4.1 percent this year to $586.1 billion, or about flat with last year’s growth. But the online part of that is expected to rise 15 percent to $68.4 billion, according to Forrester Research. As a result, brick-and-mortar retailers are trying everything they can to lure consumers into stores by making shopping as easy as possible. In addition to expanding their hours into Thanksgiving, many are offering free layaways and shipping, matching the cheaper prices of online rivals and updating their mobile shopping apps with more information. “Every retailer wants to beat everyone else,” said C. Britt Beemer, chairman of America’s Research Group, a research firm based in Charleston, S.C. “Shoppers love it.” Indeed, there were 11 shoppers in a four-tent encampment outside a Best Buy store near Ann Arbor, Mich. The purpose of their wait? A $179 40-inch Toshiba LCD television is worth missing Thanksgiving dinner at home. Jackie Berg, 26, of Ann Arbor, arrived first with her stepson and a friend Wednesday afternoon, seeking three of the televisions. The deal makes the TVs $240 less than their normal price, so Berg says that she’ll save more than $700.

Fewer holiday catalogs but still plenty in mail

By David Sharp Associated Press

PORTLAND, Maine — Catalog shopper Kerry Falagario would be hard-pressed to tell that there’s been a decrease in catalog circulation. They’re coming fast and furious this time of the year: catalogs from specialty tool companies for her husband, who likes to tinker; American Eagle, Justice, Delia’s and Body Central for her daughters, ages 8 and 14; and Pottery Barn or others with a focus on home decorations for herself. “Just the other day, I had five. There wasn’t even enough room for my mail,” said Falagario, describing the stuffed roadside mailbox outside her suburban Gorham home. Despite the flood around the holidays, annual catalog circulation by retailers has actually dipped substantially because of a postage increase, a weak economy and more shoppers making purchases online. Nearly a third fewer catalogs are mailed than were four years ago. L.L. Bean, the Freeport-based outdoors retailer, is among those that have scaled back page counts and become choosier about who gets its catalogs. Bean’s catalog circulation has been relatively flat for the past few years, but the number of catalog pages declined 20 percent from last year, the company said. Steve Fuller, L.L. Bean’s marketing chief, sees the trend accelerating but he doesn’t see catalogs going away anytime soon. That’s because catalogs and online sales are intertwined, with catalogs serving as a tool to get customers’ attention and to motivate them to make purchases, often online. “People are using catalogs differently now than ever before. For some customers, they’re still a primary shopping vehicle but that number is decreasing at a very fast rate. For a lot of people, they complement a trip to the retail store or a trip to the website,” he said. The precipitous drop in mailings followed a 23 percent average postage increase in 2007 for the category that includes standard-sized catalogs. From fiscal 2008 to fiscal 2012, catalog volume is estimated to have dropped by about 5.6 billion catalogs to about 12 billion, a decline of 32 percent, though the trend appears to be flattening, said Jonathan Leon, manager of catalogs for the U.S. Postal Service.

Woods may have crossed line

■ Morehead looks into conduct of its coach during game at UK

By Gary Graves
Associated Press

LEXINGTON — Morehead State first-year coach Sean Woods is facing possible disciplinary action after appearing to shove Eagles point guard Devon Atkinson during Wednesday's 81-70 loss to Kentucky. Athletic department spokesman Matt Segal said Thursday the situation is being discussed internally and any disciplinary action would be announced Friday morning. Atkinson fouled out with 5:51 remaining, and an agitated Woods shouted at the senior as he walked toward the bench. The coach then appeared to shove Atkinson in the back, pushing him forward, and continued yelling at him during the timeout. Woods, who led Mississippi Valley State to last year's NCAA tournament before arriving at Morehead State, said he wants his team to reflect his intense personality. And he was especially animated while facing his alma mater — which has the former point guard's jersey hanging from the rafters at Rupp Arena. Woods rarely stood still during the game, pacing the sidelines and getting in Eagles players' faces. Morehead State responded with a physical game that the Eagles held the lead against Kentucky in both halves.

Morehead State coach Sean Woods, left, gives pointers to Chad Posthumus during the first half of Wednesday night's game against Kentucky at Rupp Arena in Lexington.

It also resulted in 32 personal fouls that helped the Wildcats rally to win. "How did they look to-ing to be every day. We're going to fight. ... "Every day we step out in practice and in games, we have got to have a chip on our shoulders that we have something to prove." But Woods may have crossed the line against Kentucky. The game ended with his second intense sideline encounter with a player this season. During a 67-45 loss at Maryland on Nov. 12, Woods was seen yelling in the face of Chad Posthumus while the junior center was sitting on the bench. Morehead State players seemed unaffected by their coach's behavior. "It doesn't make us uncomfortable," junior forward Drew Kelly said. "We can handle it and it makes us better." Woods' passion landed him in the spotlight before Wednesday night's game. Earlier in the week he criticized some of the current Wildcats' attitude and for their limited knowledge of Kentucky basketball history. It bothered him that Wildcats freshman center Willie Cauley-Stein was unaware of Christian Laettner or "The Shot" that beat Kentucky in 1992. "They don't get it," Woods said. "They play basketball, but they don't know what basketball really is. And they're very, very fortunate. We live in a microwave society now, and it's a shame that kids don't know the history." Woods later apologized for his comments via Twitter and said Wednesday night that he was ready to move on from that incident. Now he is trying to put another controversy behind him.

Coach's blunder helps Texans win

■ Houston edges Lions 34-31 in OT

By Larry Lage
Associated Press

DETROIT — The Houston Texans took advantage of a big mistake by Detroit Lions coach Jim Schwartz. Shayne Graham's 32-yard field goal with 2:21 left overtime lifted Houston to a 34-31 win over Detroit on Thursday after Schwartz broke an NFL rule on a scoring play. Detroit kicker Jason Hanson had a chance to get Schwartz off the hook, but his 47-yard field goal attempt on the fifth possession of the extra period hit the right upright. Schwartz threw a challenge flag when Houston's Justin Forsett scored on an 81-yard touchdown run in the third quarter. Replays showed Forsett was down near midfield, but Schwartz negated the automatic review by challenging the play and was called for unsportsmanlike conduct. "It's on me," Schwartz said to his assistant coaches and players on the sideline as he tapped his chest. "It's on me." Yes, it was. That touchdown pulled Houston within three points counted and Schwartz was called for unsportsmanlike conduct. Arian Foster ran for 102 yards and two scores, including a 1-yard run with 1:55 left in the fourth quarter to cap a 15-play, 97-yard drive that took 5:43 off the clock and tied the game at 31.

Houston Texans free safety Danieal Manning (38) knocks down a pass intended for Detroit Lions wide receiver Calvin Johnson (81) in the fourth quarter of their NFL game at Ford Field in Detroit on Thursday. The Texans won in overtime 34-31.

AFC South-leading Houston (10-1) took its first lead when Graham made up for missing a field goal earlier in a turnover-filled OT. The Texans have won five straight — two in a row in OT — and if a handful of teams lose they could be in the playoffs by the time they get back on the practice field after a long weekend. Detroit (4-7) has lost three straight to make it extremely difficult to reach its goal of earning a spot in consecutive postseasons for the first time since the mid-1990s. And as if the Lions don't have enough problems, defensive tackle Ndamukong Suh could be in trouble with the league again after his left cleat connected with Matt Schaub's groin area in the first quarter. It wasn't clear on replays Thursday whether it was intentional, but it might be tough for Suh to get the benefit of doubt. Suh was on his chest, taken down by an offensive lineman, when he extended his left foot below Schaub's belt. Last year on Thanksgiving, Suh was ejected for stomping on the right arm of Green Bay offensive lineman Evan Dietrich-Smith and was suspended for two games. He has been fined in previous seasons for roughing up quarterbacks: Cincinnati's Andy Dalton, Chicago's Jay Cutler and Cleveland's Jake Delhomme. Schaub shook off the blow, stayed in the game, and was 29 of 48 for 315 yards with 9-yard TD to Owen Daniels to tie the game at 14 late in the first half. Houston's Andre Johnson had nine receptions for 188 yards. J.J. Watt had three sacks, one on Detroit's first snap and the other two that helped the Texans stay within a TD late in the game. Detroit scored four go-ahead TDs, including on Joique Bell's 23-yard run early in the fourth quarter, and had a 10-point lead midway through the third quarter.

The Lions drove deep enough into Houston territory to put Hanson in a position to give them a 10-point lead, but Watt forced them to punt each time with sacks on third downs. Matthew Stafford was 31 of 61 for 441 yards with two TDs — tiebreaking scores to Calvin Johnson and Mike Thomas in the second quarter — for 441 yards and an interception. Detroit failed to make the Texans respect its running game with Mikel Leshoure gaining just 32 yards on 12 carries. Leshoure did give the Lions their first TD on an opening possession that marked the first rushing score on the ground against Houston.

Irish coach Kelly takes unusual path to spotlight

By Tom Coyne
Associated Press

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Brian Kelly appears to be the coach with all the right answers. Nearly every decision he's made this season has seemed to work out, from picking Everett Golson as starting quarterback to having Tommy Rees replace him at key times. Kelly has led Notre Dame from unranked to the brink of what could be one of the best chapters in the storied program's history as the top-ranked Irish (11-0) prepare to face Southern California (7-4) on Saturday. Those who know Kelly say that all he has been through during his coaching career has led him to this moment. Kelly took an unusual path to Notre Dame. He played football at Assumption College in Worcester, Mass., when it was a club sport, and planned a life in politics. But his love of football was too great. So he took a steep pay cut to become a graduate assistant. That set him on the road to becoming the head coach who may be on the verge of proving himself a worthy successor to Knute Rockne, Frank Leahy, Ara Parseghian and Lou Holtz. "I'm not surprised at all by what he's done," said Curt Anes, who played quarterback for Kelly when Grand Valley State won the Division II national championship in 2002. "It's the nature of who he is. He's such a leader. He's tenacious in what he does. He's just really doggone good at it."

Griffin shines, Redskins hold off Cowboys 38-31

By Schuyler Dixon
Associated Press

ARLINGTON, Texas — Welcome back to Texas, RG3. Robert Griffin III threw for 311 yards and four touchdowns, helping the Washington Redskins beat the Dallas Cowboys 38-31 on Thursday. The Heisman Trophy winner from Baylor made the Cowboys look like an overmatched college team during the decisive second quarter in Griffin's first pro game in his home state. He got some help from his receivers, including a leaping grab and long run from Pierre Garcon and some nifty footwork in the end zone by Santana Moss. Tony Romo lost for the first time in six starts on Dallas Cowboys quarterback Tony Romo (9) is knocked to the ground by the Washington Redskins' Jarvis Jenkins, top, in the second half of their NFL game on Thursday in Arlington, Texas.

Thanksgiving, despite a career-high 441 yards and three second-half touchdowns, including the longest of his career — an 85-yarder to Dez Bryant.

Romo ran in a 2-point conversion after a TD throw to Felix Jones and threw another scoring pass to Bryant to help Dallas close to 35-28 with 8:24 remaining after the Cowboys trailed 28-3 at halftime. "I thought we had a good chance," Romo said. But Griffin answered — twice, actually. After Romo's long touchdown to Bryant, Griffin threw his fourth scoring pass, a 29-yarder to Niles Paul. The rookie became the first Redskins quarterback to throw four touchdown passes in consecutive games. After the Cowboys pulled within a touchdown, Griffin drove them into scoring position again, calmly completing three passes for first downs and running 5½ minutes off the clock before Kai Forbath made it 38-28 on a 48-yard field goal. Dallas drove to a field goal, but DeAngelo Hall easily picked up the inside kick and ran untouched before sliding down short of the goal line, clinching Romo's third loss in three career 400-yard games. It also was the Cowboys' first loss to the Redskins in seven games on Thanksgiving. The Cowboys (5-6) actually contained Griffin in the first quarter, getting a sack and forcing an intentional grounding penalty that gave them good enough field position for an easy drive to a 3-0 lead. Everything changed on Griffin's first big NFL play in Texas. He hit Al-drick Robinson in stride for a 68-yard touchdown and a 7-3 lead to spark the first 28-point quarter in 13 years for the Redskins (5-6).

NASCAR ready to move past 2012

■ Season ends on celebratory note with Keselowski's crown

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — The season hadn't even ended before NASCAR's top executives were previewing 2013, the new "Gen 6" cars and elements of a five-year industry "action plan" designed to engage and excite fans.

The season ended with a celebratory final image of fresh-faced champion Brad Keselowski, drunk on the combination of his sponsor's beer and the joy of giving team owner Roger Penske his first championship. And the days since Sunday's finale have been a coming out party for the 28-year-old from suburban Detroit, who is all over the television dial smoothly shilling for NASCAR.

It's a reprieve from the bad news: ESPN's ratings from the race at Homestead-Miami Speedway were down 25 percent from last year's race, the most-viewed in network history. Ratings were down or flat for all 10 Chase for the Sprint Cup championship races this season.

Why? Because the racing in 2012 was mostly forgettable, something chairman Brian France has tasked his entire competition department with fixing.

"The missing and final piece, which we're working on now, is to improve on the quality of racing," France said before Sunday's finale. "Everyone knows a stated goal of ours is to have the closest, most competitive, tightest racing that we can. And that's what we're testing now."

So in one sense, NAS-

CAR couldn't wait to get out of Homestead and officially close a 2012 season that opened with perhaps the most bizarre Daytona 500 in history.

Heavy rains washed out NASCAR's marquee event for the first time in 54 runnings, pushing the race into a prime-time Monday night slot. Then, a freak crash between Juan Pablo Montoya and a truck loaded with jet fuel ignited a fuel fire and a nearly two-hour delay.

While track workers tried to clean the mess with Tide laundry detergent, Keselowski grabbed worldwide attention with both thumbs by tweeting updates from his car.

The TV ratings were good, the buzz surrounding NASCAR was better but it wasn't sustainable as the Sprint Cup Series quickly fell into a stretch of nearly unwatchable racing. California ran caution-free until rain brought out the yellow that eventually stopped the race. Texas had two debris cautions until the race went green 234 laps to the finish.

Bristol had just one multi-car crash and featured a 219-lap green-flag run. Kansas in the spring had three cautions, two for debris and one for a single-car spin and the race ended with a 75-lap green-flag run.

With Richmond and Talladega looming, fans believed action-packed racing was ahead. Instead, Richmond was a bland affair until Carl Edwards was accused of jumping a late restart and Talladega exposed the disconnect between drivers and fans.

TERRY RENNA/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Brad Keselowski holds up his trophy after winning the NASCAR Sprint Cup Series championship following a race at Homestead-Miami Speedway on Sunday, Nov. 18, in Homestead, Fla. Keselowski clinched the title after fellow contender Jimmie Johnson pulled out of the season finale because of a parts failure. Jeff Gordon won the race.

Sure, there was the usual late-race multi-car accident, and Tony Stewart's tongue-in-cheek assessment of the racing proved there's no middle ground in racin' vs. wreckin'.

"It's not fair to these fans for them to not see more wrecks than that and more torn-up cars," he sarcastically said after the May race. "We still had over half the cars running at the end, and it shouldn't be that way."

When NASCAR returned to Daytona in July, promoter Bruton Smith was calling for mandatory cautions to spice up the racing and France was adamantly opposed to the need for gimmicks. But, France revealed that he'd dispatched senior vice president of racing operations Steve O'Donnell to North Carolina to repurpose NASCAR's research and development center and zero in on the correct rules package for the debut of the new car next year.

Hours before the race, AJ Allmendinger was suspended for failing a random drug test. Nothing diverts attention like a scandal, and Allmendinger's woes and his job with straight-laced Penske Racing dominated the news for the next month.

Curry leads way as Duke manhandles Minnesota

Wire reports

Seth Curry scored 25 points and Mason Plumlee added 20 points and a career-high-matching 17 rebounds as No. 5 Duke's starters scored all but two of the Blue Devils' points in an 89-71 victory over Minnesota on Thursday in the first round of the Battle 4 Atlantis.

Plumlee was coming off a career-high 28 points on 9-for-11 shooting from the field, 10 of 11 from the free throw line and had nine rebounds in the Blue Devils' previous game, an 88-67 win over Florida Gulf Coast.

Sophomore point guard Quinn Cook had a career-high 17 points for the Blue Devils who extended their regular-season tournament winning streak to 21 games, a run that stretches to the championship game of the 2006 CBE Classic.

Duke (4-0) will face the winner of the first-round game between No. 19 Memphis and VCU in Friday's semifinals.

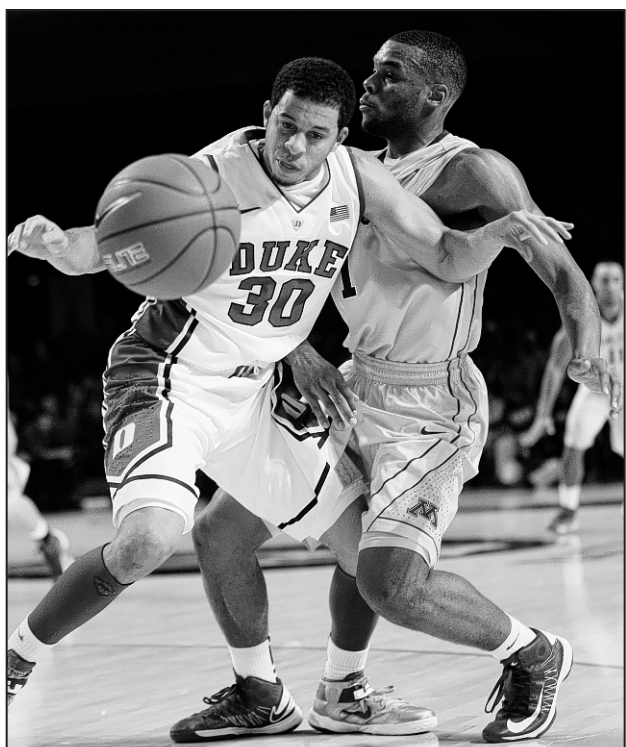

Rodney Williams had 16 points for the Golden Gophers (4-1), who just couldn't cut into the Blue Devils' lead in the second half.

■ Missouri 78, Stanford 70: Laurence Bowers scored 19 points, as usual most were in the second half, and grabbed 10 rebounds as No. 13 Missouri beat Stanford 78-70 in the first round of the Battle 4 Atlantis on Thursday.

Bowers, who had 13 points in the second half Thursday, has scored more points after halftime in every game this season for the Tigers (4-0). He came in averaging 15.5 points per game, 14.0 in the second half.

Missouri will face the winner of the first-round game between No. 2 Louisville and Northern Iowa in Friday's semifinals.

for Missouri, which had just three field goals over the final 9:10 and they were all grouped in a 1:57 span starting with 2:12 to play. It didn't matter as the Tigers were 10 of 11 from the free throw line over that span.

Chasson Randle had 22 points for the Cardinal (3-2), who have lost two straight after an eight-game winning streak.

■ Western Ky. 70, DePaul 61: Jamal Crook scored 16 points, T.J. Price added 13 points, five rebounds and five assists and Western Kentucky went on to a 70-61 win over DePaul in the consolation game of the Cancun Challenge on Wednesday night.

Western Kentucky (3-2) had a comfortable lead for much of the contest before the Blue Demons made things interesting in the second half, completing a 21-8 run when Durrell McDonald scored on a fast-break dunk with 1:17 and cut the lead to seven, 68-61, but the run came too late to overcome the Hilltoppers.

DePaul's Cleveland Melvin scored 14 of his 22 points in the second half and added 13 rebounds but it wasn't enough.

■ Illinois 78, Butler 61: Brandon Paul scored 20 points to lead Illinois to the Maui Invitational title on Wednesday night, beating Butler in a 78-61 blowout that marked its third straight double-digit win.

The Illini (6-0) held off several attempts by Butler to string points together in the second half. Paul was one of four players in double figures, along with Tracy Abrams with 17 points and Tyler Griffey and D.J. Richardson with 14 each.

Illinois shot 48 percent as Butler relied almost exclusively on point guard Rotnei Clarke to score. Clarke had 27 points and took nearly one-third his team's shots.

Arkansas eyeing role of spoiler in today's clash with No. 8 LSU

By Kurt Voigt
Associated Press

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Arkansas quarterback Tyler Wilson would love nothing more than to play the role of spoiler this week.

Any hopes of a bowl game ended in a loss at Mississippi State last week for the Razorbacks (4-7, 2-5 Southeastern Conference), who began the season ranked in the top 10.

What began with national championship dreams, even following former coach Bobby Petrino's firing in April, will come to a certain end when Arkansas hosts No. 8 LSU (9-2, 5-2) on Friday. How things play out after that for the Razorbacks, including the identity of their new coach, is unknown.

The Tigers still have expectations of a BCS bowl game — and are clinging to hopes of re-entering the SEC and national championship pictures.

"This is it," Wilson said. "... So, why not go out there and light it up one more time? That's how I'm looking at it."

Wilson wasn't the only one to let his guard down this week.

Interim coach John L. Smith, whose return after taking over for the scandal-ridden Petrino is unlikely, fought back tears while looking back at the Razorbacks' disappointing season. Arkansas began the season ranked in the top 10 before an early season loss to Louisiana-Monroe sent it tumbling from the polls and began a four-game losing streak from which the Razorbacks never recovered.

Smith, whose open personality was welcomed upon his return in April, took criticism for his thirds of the race, and then a blown tire sent Johnson into the wall. It put Keselowski in great shape headed into the finale, but not before Jeff Gordon intentionally wrecked Clint Bowyer to trigger a garage-area melee and prove the season-long theme that the sideshows tend to overshadow the actual racing.

Gordon was fined $100,000 and could have been suspended for last week's finale. Even after holding off Bowyer to win Sunday's race, he was dealing with the aftermath of Phoenix.

"It's like our whole season wrapped up in one week," he said. "You can try all you want to move past the moment, but man, it just ate me up inside all week. I just kept going back and forth from being disappointed, being angry, feeling that I had a right. I didn't have a right."

He looked around at his race team, grateful they stood behind him all season and after the Bowyer incident, and grateful they'll be with him next year.

"I think it started in our team meeting before the race, I apologized to those guys for some of the things that transpired that they had to get involved with that wasn't their doing last week, and I put them in that position, and I apologized to them and I thanked them at the same time for having my back," Gordon said. "We've had to have one another's backs because we've all made mistakes this year. And so to be able to celebrate with them in victory lane was very special, very meaningful, and gives a tremendous amount of momentum to go into 2013 with the new race car."

It's all about next season.

same upbeat nature once the losses began to pile up. His coaching fate now lies in the hands of Arkansas athletic director Jeff Long following Friday's game.

"We're sorry again we couldn't have maybe done more," Smith said.

While the Razorbacks' postseason is expected to be filled with transition to a new coaching staff, LSU is hopeful of a return to a BCS bowl game and possibly more.

The Tigers appeared out of the SEC and national championship pictures following a Nov. 3 loss to Alabama, but they are currently the highest-ranked, two-loss team and could potentially player their way back into next weekend's conference title game. Of course, that's only possible if Auburn shocks the No. 2 Crimson Tide this weekend — and LSU wins.

Cats, Vols facing coaching transitions

■ UK-UT matchup is awkward with Phillips, Dooley on way out

The Associated Press

LEXINGTON — Saturday's Kentucky-Tennessee matchup can be summed up in one word: Awkward.

On one sideline is Kentucky's Joker Phillips, coaching the Wildcats for the last time after being fired on Nov. 4. His counterpart is Jim Chaney, who is serving as the Volunteers' interim coach after Derek Dooley declined to finish the season following his firing on Sunday.

This adds a new twist to a rivalry game.

But when the teams meet in Saturday's showdown in Knoxville, Tenn., everyone will be playing hard. Both schools are looking for their only Southeastern Conference victory this season.

Asked how emotional it could be for players, Phillips said, "I think they play that way because it's their last game. I expect ours to be (emotional) for the last game."

"I don't think it will be for the coach, I think it will be for them, their emotions surrounding the fact that it will be their last time to play together."

Coaching his last game for Kentucky (2-9, 0-7 SEC) against Tennessee

(4-7, 0-7) is significant for Phillips because the Volunteers have been a constant rival in his life.

He was born and raised in Franklin, Ky., on the Kentucky-Tennessee border. Phillips' final game as a Wildcats wide receiver was a 17-12 win on Nov. 24, 1984, Kentucky's last victory before losing 26 straight to Tennessee.

He ended that streak as a coach with last year's 10-7 victory in Lexington, Ky. And now, 28 years to the day after his last game as a Kentucky player, he will exit as its coach against that same Tennessee team.

Phillips has downplayed his pending exit and tried to keep the focus on his players. Nonetheless, Kentucky senior wide receiver La'Rod King said he has been motivated to send Phillips out on a positive note.

"It's been a blessing for him to come back to his home state and his home school," King said. "Granted, he's been through (player) injuries, freshmen having to step up and play, battling personal issues, I guess."

"Of course, he's human. He has emotions just like all of us do. He stuck through it. He's a strong guy and an awesome person. I respect him to the highest degree."

Phillips' initial instinct was not to coach the Wildcats' final two games after his firing. He thought he'd be a distraction to the players.

But after players told him they wanted him to coach out the year, he returned. Kentucky followed with Saturday's 34-3 win over Samford, ending an eight-game losing streak.

Dooley chose a different path at Tennessee.

Athletic director Dave Hart gave Dooley the option of coaching the Volunteers' season finale after firing him on Sunday. Dooley declined, not wanting to affect his players' focus as they prepared for their final game.

That thrust Chaney, Tennessee's offensive coordinator, into the interim role.

Dooley's "concern was for the players," Hart said. "Derek was not at all bitter, he was not concerned for himself in that regard. He talked at length about his concern and how difficult that might be for the players and it might take away their focus on the final game of the season and in particular the seniors. His concern was for the players and not himself."

Tennessee offensive tackle Ja'Wuan James said he and the Volunteers would have played hard on Senior Day no matter who was coaching them.

"We're going to go out there and try to win," James said. "That's what everyone on our team wants to do is win. (Dooley) basically told us he thought it would be a distraction. Whatever he feels is best."

Chaney nonetheless has tried to keep things as normal as possible this week.

"That is ultimately our job, to go win a football game," he said. "You want nothing but the best for your football players. When you quit wanting that more than anything else, it is time to get out of the profession. We want to send these seniors out with a victory and let our younger kids taste that and know what it feels like to win a game here in Neyland Stadium and enjoy that victory and move on from there."

Phillips dismissed the idea that Kentucky could pounce on Tennessee because an interim coach is leading it, having seen it from experience.

In Phillips' first season in 2010, Kentucky faced a Pittsburgh team in the BBVA Compass Bowl being led by an interim coach. Dave Wannstedt had resigned and Mike Haywood accepted the head coaching job three weeks before the bowl game.

Haywood was then fired on Jan. 1, 2011 following his arrest on felony domestic violence charges, and defensive coordinator Phil Bennett was named interim coach a week before the game. The Panthers won 27-10.

"It was another game for those guys," Phillips said of Pittsburgh.

Big East could see more realignment

By Gary Graves
Associated Press

LOUISVILLE — The struggling Big East Conference came up short again in the latest round of expansion.

The conference lost its fifth member in the past 18 months with Rutgers bolting for the Big Ten Tuesday. Now the league could lose one of its two most prominent remaining football programs.

Louisville or Connecticut could join the Atlantic Coast Conference — which is seeking a replacement for Big Ten-bound Maryland.

Central Florida, Houston, Memphis, SMU, Boise State and San Diego State are due to make the big East a 12-team league next season, with Navy football arriving in 2015. But this week's news was another blow to the league's fight to remain relevant with the other five major BCS conferences — Big Ten, ACC, PAC-12, Big 12 and the Southeastern Conference.

Still, commissioner Mike Aresco remains confident he can keep the Big East intact and complete his own expansion plans.

He said the league will move quickly to replace Rutgers. The West coast appears to be the target region with BYU, Air Force and UNLV as possible candidates.

payouts, exposure and competitive balance — work out.

On the field, it's been good and bad for Louisville.

The Cardinals won a share of the Big East last year and are title contenders again this year. Before suffering their first loss at Syracuse on Nov. 10, they were as high as ninth in the BCS championship standings. But they were never received any consideration for the national title.

Even if Louisville had remained unbeaten through last weekend's upheaval that saw top-ranked Kansas State and No. 2 Oregon fall, it's doubtful that the Cardinals could've gotten into the discussion.

It's an uphill battle for recognition for Big East teams.

"I think the perception is that the Big East is a step or two beneath the other conferences," ESPN college football analyst Kirk Herbstreit said in a conference call last month. No. 21 Rutgers is the only other ranked team in the conference.

Aside from the lack of respect, there are the financial considerations.

The Big East paid its members $6 million each last season, about $18 million less than what the Big Ten paid out to its teams. Rutgers athletic director Tim Perneti cited that as a major reason in joining the Big Ten, which gets the top-rated New York television market in return.

The ACC also has a bigger bankroll than the Big East — two years ago the conference paid its members an average of $12-$13 million each and the league just recently signed a new TV contract that will increase that payout.

Connecticut has made it clear that it would welcome interest from the ACC. The same goes for Louisville, which had talked with the Big 12 about joining before the league admitted West Virginia this season.

But until the school is contacted, Cardinals coach Charlie Strong remains committed to the Big East.

"I try not to get caught up in that because my focus right now is just preparing this team for these next two games," Strong said Monday.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Tennessee quarterback Tyler Bray has experienced many peaks and valleys in his junior season, but he was a model of consistency in his final weekly media session.

Three times during his discussion with reporters, Bray was asked draft-related questions. He gave pretty much the same response to each.

"We play Kentucky on Saturday," Bray said. "That's all I'm worried about."

Tennessee's season finale against Kentucky could represent the last college game for Bray and junior wide receivers Justin Hunter and Cordarrelle Patterson. All three are projected to get taken in the first two rounds of the NFL draft if they forgo their senior seasons.

Because of their uncertain status, the future complexion of Tennessee's offense remains almost as murky as the makeup of next year's coaching staff now that Derek Dooley has been fired.

Fullback Ben Bartholomew, tight end Mychal Rivera, wide receiver Zach Rogers and guard Dallas Thomas are the only senior offensive players who have started at least five games for Tennessee this season. The Vols are expected to return Rajion Neal and Marlin Lane, who have combined to rush for 1,238 yards this season. Thomas is the lone senior on an offensive line that has allowed only seven sacks all season.

Tennessee quarterback Tyler Bray passes against Vanderbilt during the fourth quarter of a game on Saturday, Nov. 17, in Nashville, Tenn. Vanderbilt won 41-18.

Tennessee could have one of the more potent offenses in the nation if Bray, Hunter and Patterson stay in school. If all three leave, the offense would have a serious lack of star power at the skill positions.

Each could boost his prospect by returning.

"Assuming they come back and remain healthy and iron out some of those wrinkles, I think they could go from being borderline first-round picks to top-10 picks," said Rob Rang, a senior analyst for nfldraftscout.com. "But at the same time, there's also the risk of a new head coach coming in and whether his system would fit those players, and also the injury concerns as well."

Rang believes Patterson and Hunter could get taken late in the first round or early in the second, though he rates Patterson ahead of his teammate. ESPN draft analyst Mel Kiper Jr. rates Patterson as the nation's No. 12 overall draft-eligible prospect.

Rang currently has Bray as a second-round pick, but he believes the pre-draft interview process will be particularly crucial for him.

"He really does possess as much or more arm talent than any quarterback potentially available in the 2013 draft," Rang said.

Bray has passed for 3,319 yards and 30 touchdowns this season. During one three-week stretch, Bray threw for 1,302 yards, 13 touchdowns and only one interception against South Carolina, Troy and Missouri. But he struggled in losses to Florida, Georgia, Alabama and Vanderbilt. He also could face questions from NFL teams about his maturity and demeanor.

"There are some similarities to (former Arkansas quarterback) Ryan Mallett when he came out," Rang said. "He had first-round tools, but there were some concerns about his mental makeup and things of that nature. It's the same kind of thing with Tyler Bray. He's going to have to impress teams with his maturity and leadership."

Alabama town plagued by tornado damage

■ Residents: Cleanup stalled by FEMA

By Jay Reeves
Associated Press

CORDOVA, Ala. — Main Street in this old mill town looks about the same as it did the day after tornadoes killed about 250 people across Alabama a year and a half ago: Battered red bricks and broken glass litter the pavement, and the buildings still standing are rickety and roofless.

The entire one-block downtown, still deemed unsafe, remains sealed off by a chain-link fence. City officials blame the Federal Emergency Management Agency, saying the money to demolish skeletons of the old buildings is mired in miles of red tape.

When one request for photos or historical documentation is met, FEMA makes another, the mayor and others in this town of 2,100 say. One crop of workers is replaced by another, forcing locals to constantly explain their problems to new people.

“It’s very frustrating,” said Mayor Drew Gilbert, a 25-year-old Cordova native who served on the City Council before taking office this month.

“You would think it’s been touched and seen now by everyone who needs to touch and see it.”

On April 27, 2011, dozens of tornadoes ripped across the southeast, spawned by freakish weather. Hundreds were killed and thousands of homes and businesses were damaged or destroyed, causing more than $1 billion in damage.

While cleanup and demolition projects are moving along in devastated communities like Tuscaloosa and Hackleburg — where wrecked homes and businesses are mostly gone and new ones are slowly being built — Cordova’s downtown stands out as an eerie reminder of the destruction.

FEMA officials say they’re only doing their job in Cordova, documenting damaged buildings and covering all the details before providing money to tear them down.

“This project involves demolition of multiple historically significant structures and requires that FEMA consider all pertinent environmental and historic preservation laws before funding the project,” the agency said in response to questions from The Associated Press.

Yet the process has been baffling not just for local residents but to the head of historic preservation for the state, Elizabeth Brown.

“I think FEMA needs to give their people in the field more latitude,” said Brown, preservation officer for the Alabama Historical Commission. “It seems things have to keep going back up the chain.”

Brown said the demolition process seems to be taking longer than usual in Cordova, but government rules don’t set out a strict timetable for such decisions since needs and damage can vary so greatly from one place to another. Town leaders say FEMA has never given them a firm timetable.

Located in coal country about 35 miles northwest of Birmingham, Cordova began in the 1880s at a spot where two railroad lines converged. A textile mill operated in town for about seven decades before closing in 1962.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Cordova, Ala., Fire Chief Dean Harbison, left, and Mayor Drew Gilbert walk through the town’s tornado-damaged downtown recently. The area looks much as it did right after tornadoes struck in April 2011 because the Federal Emergency Management Agency has yet to provide funding for demolition.

The mill’s failure displaced 800 workers and sent Cordova into a tailspin. Most of the 19 or so buildings in the downtown block were vacant and deteriorating by the time the twisters struck last year.

Many people left town for work in metro Birmingham or nearby Jasper before the twisters, and there are even fewer jobs in Cordova now aside from schools, a bank, a pharmacy and a health clinic. The town’s sole grocery store was wiped out and has yet to reopen; a convenience store near the battered downtown block has closed, too.

Cordova Fire Chief Dean Harbison, who also serves as the town’s recovery coordinator, said FEMA was helpful at first. “They’ve provided us some money,” Harbison said. “But as far as recovery, they’ve slowed us down.”

A long-term plan sponsored by FEMA initially recommended reclaiming downtown Cordova, but Haribson said an in-depth examination revealed major structural problems and city officials decided to demolish the entire block.

Family tradition

■ Father, sons make U.S. military their life

By Alex Branch
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

NEWARK, Texas — Seventeen-year-old Charles Braun quit high school in 1944 and surprised no one with what he did next.

His father, Lt. Col. Joseph F. Braun Sr., was a career military man who fought in World War I, and Charles and his six brothers spent most of their youths on military bases.

His two older brothers, James and Frank, had already enlisted to fight World War II.

So, Charles joined the Air Force. Then, his younger brother, Harry, signed up.

Then, his brother Joseph Jr. Then, his brother Donald. Then, his brother Richard.

From 1917 to 1970, the eight Braun men accumulated 146 years of active-duty military service in the Air Force, Army and Marines. At least one Braun man stepped into the battlefields of World War I and World War II, the foxholes of Korea and the jungles of Vietnam.

Somehow, everyone always came home.

“Seems kind of like a miracle now,” said Charles Braun, 86, who lives in Newark, a small city northwest of Fort Worth. “But we were all really proud to go and fight for our country. Family tradition is what it amounted to, I guess.”

That’s a tradition too rich to be forgotten. Braun is methodically documenting his family’s service, hunting down official military records on his father and brothers, their assignments and the medals, stripes and ribbons they earned.

He displays the awards in shadow boxes that bear each family member’s nameplate.

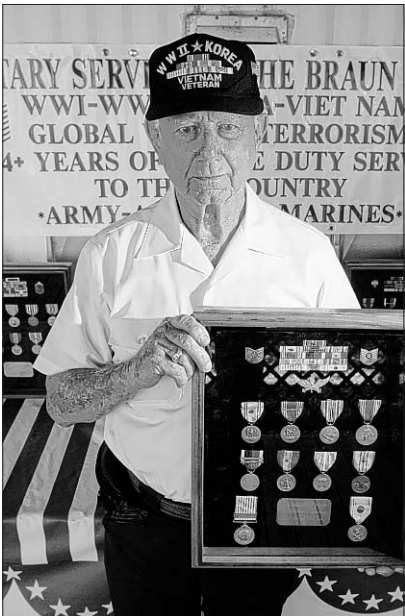

He is building the same boxes for a granddaughter and nephew who later boosted the family’s military service to 154 years. And he is still gathering documentation on a second nephew who served.

Braun, whose own military career spanned 26 years until he retired as an Air Force master sergeant, is a member of Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 4443.

In December, he traveled to Austin to display his shadow boxes for a national VFW commander. His arranges the boxes among miniature American flags.

Eventually, he would like to submit the display to an archive for safekeeping.

“Once I’m gone, I’m afraid they are just going to get scattered to the wind, and that’s no good,” Braun said.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Charles Braun, an Air Force veteran of World War II, Korea and Vietnam living in Newark, Texas, holds a display of military medals and ribbons.

The Brauns’ service to their country has drawn attention over the years. The family’s picture appeared in a March 1951 issue of Life of the Soldier and the Airmen with a story titled “Brauns in Blues.”

“Meet the Brauns — all seven of them!” the story reads. “It’s not unusual these days for a family to have three or four members in Army or Air Force Service, but the Brauns top this.”

The Braun boys grew up on military bases, spending most of their time “running around and agitating each other,” Braun said. But after they made military commitments, time together became rare and precious.

“We were practically separated all the time,” Braun said. “One would come home and before he got there another would be transferred out somewhere else. That’s just kind of the way it went, and you just hoped everyone was doing OK.”

Braun’s service took him to the Republic of Panama during World War II, where he patrolled for Japanese submarines.

He did aircraft maintenance on B-29 bombers during the Korean War and, during Vietnam, flew in the back seat of a 0-1 Bird Dog looking for targets on the ground.

Although some brothers fought in the same conflicts, they never actually served together, he said.

The deaths of the five Sullivan brothers from Iowa after a Japanese submarine torpedoed the USS Juneau at Guadalcanal during World War II weighed on everyone’s mind.

The Brauns’ mother, Bertha Mae, did the most worrying. During World War II, families of U.S. servicemen displayed Blue Star Flags, with each star representing a family member at war.

Mrs. Braun had so many loved ones serving that she needed two banners to hang in the window.

“They didn’t make the flags big enough for all the stars she needed,” he said.

As with most military mothers, her greatest fear was an unexpected knock at the door.

“Drove my mother a little crazy for a little while because a lot of us were on active duty serving overseas at the same time,” Braun said. “She got a lot of gray hairs wondering if we were all OK. When she heard from us, she said, ‘Well, we made it through another day.’”

His father, whose military career lasted 33 years, simply told his sons that he was proud of them.

Braun started on his shadow box about five years ago. As he was finishing, it occurred to him that his father and brothers deserved the same.

“I got to thinking, ‘Gee, my dad doesn’t have one with all the time that he served,’ “ Braun said. “My brothers, too. So I started getting the official military records and started going through for what they were authorized to wear or what they were awarded.”

Braun has finished shadow boxes for all but two brothers. Gathering the documentation from the Department of Defense takes time; governmental gears turn slowly when it comes to information.

He bought the medals and stripes from the Naval Air Station Fort Worth Joint Reserve Base.

Accuracy is important. Braun keeps all the information he has gathered neatly stacked in blue folders with each family’s member name on them.

“I wanted to make sure I didn’t have anyone with a medal they weren’t authorized to wear,” Braun said. “I wanted the documents to back it up.”

Four decades have passed since Braun retired from the military. His mother, father and three brothers have died. Those who are still alive have settled in Texas, Washington and Colorado, and overseas in Italy.

The brothers stay in contact on their computers using Skype.

Braun chats with them from his Newark home, where an American flag waves in the front yard. A “Support Our Troops” decal adorns the front door.

Veterans Day has special significance to his family.

Woman with infant drives on Phoenix airport runway

By Bob Christie And Jacques Billeaud
Associated Press

PHOENIX — A woman driving with her infant son in her car crashed through a gate at Phoenix Sky Harbor International Airport and drove on the runway in the latest in a series of similar mishaps across the country that have raised questions whether the nation’s airports are truly secure.

The woman rammed the partially open airport gate around 10 p.m. about a week ago and started crossing the runway, police spokesman Sgt. Trent Crump said. Officers forced the car to stop after a few minutes and detained the driver.

KoKo Nicole Anderson, 21, from nearby Mesa, was booked into jail on aggravated DUI and criminal damage charges. Police suspect she had taken an unknown drug and don’t believe she was impaired from alcohol. A drug-recognition expert was called to the scene shortly after her arrest.

The child — a 2-month-old boy — was in a car seat. He wasn’t hurt and has been turned over to relatives. Crump said Anderson was so impaired she didn’t even know her son was in the car.

“We don’t believe her intent was to harm here,” Crump said. “We believe it’s impairment and poor decision making.”

Such incidents are troublesome because a vehicle that crashed into a jetliner landing or taking off could cause a catastrophe, whether it was an intoxicated driver behind the wheel or a terrorist, said Jeff Price, an aviation professor at the Metropolitan State University of Denver and former assistant security director at Denver International Airport.

Airports in general need to think about adding barriers that automatically pop up if an unauthorized vehicle enters a gate as part of an overall upgrade of perimeter security that also includes better detection systems, he said. He noted that Sky Harbor meets federal security standards.

The incident was the latest involving vehicles crashing through the Phoenix airport’s gates or fences and getting onto its runways. Sky Harbor spent $10 million to upgrade its perimeter security and access gates after a man being chased by police in 2005 crashed a stolen pickup through a gate and drove onto the runways, passing several jets on a taxiway.

In 2003, two teens in a stolen car crashed through a perimeter fence and drove onto the airfield. Both incidents caused brief closure of aircraft operations.

In Thursday night’s incident, an airport operations worker was testing the gate as it was closing when the small sedan crashed through, Sky Harbor spokeswoman Deborah Ostreicher said. The worker promptly notified police and the control tower, which ordered a halt to air traffic operations.

As the car made it onto a runway, Anderson lost control, then took off again, Crump said.

A police probable cause statement said she then hit a portable toilet and kept driving until an officer rammed her car and caused it to spin around and crash into a fence.

She did not get out of the car after it stopped, and police found her with a pacifier in her month. All she told officers was that she wanted her flip-flop shoe.

At least four ancient rock carvings from American Indian site stolen in Sierra Nevada

The Associated Press

BISHOP, Calif. — Rock carvings that graced a sacred American Indian site in California’s Sierra Nevada for thousands of years have fallen prey to modern thieves armed with power saws.

At least four petroglyphs — some 2 feet wide and located 15 feet above the ground — were hacked from lava cliffs in the Eastern Sierra, the Los Angeles Times reported Sunday.

Visitors to the area, known as Volcanic Tableland, discovered the theft and reported it to the federal Bureau of Land Management on Oct. 31.

“This was the worst act of vandalism ever seen” on the 750,000 acres of public land administered by the BLM field office in Bishop, BLM archaeologist Greg Haverstock told the newspaper.

The thieves must have used ladders, electric generators and power saws. In addition to the four carvings that were stolen, one was defaced with deep saw cuts on three sides, and another was removed but apparently broke during the theft and was left propped against a boulder near a visitor parking lot.

More than 3,500 years ago, Native Americans carved pictures of hunters, deer and other animals, and geometric and other designs into a half-mile-long volcanic escarpment. The images adorn hundreds of lava boulders.

The petroglyphs are probably worth only about $500 to $1,500 on the illegal art market but are priceless to American Indians, authorities said.

Wife’s in-your-face actions mean marriage is over

Dear Amy: My wife says she wants “some space” to decide whether to stay in this marriage. She pawned her wedding rings. She said she would get the rings back but hasn’t done so yet.

I have information that she is seeing another man (at least she is making plans for this on Facebook), and I believe that they have hooked up in the past — before we separated.

She has yet to tell me

AMY DICKINSON

COLUMNIST

that our marriage is over. All she says is that she doesn’t know. She says she knows she loves me but is no longer in love or emotionally connected to me.

My heart tells me to stay until she says it’s over, but my head is telling me to cut my losses while I can.

We have young kids, so that makes it difficult. What should I do?

— Hurting Husband

Dear Hurting: How do you know when your marriage might be over? When your wife hooks up with another man and brazenly posts her plans on Facebook. When your wife tells you she is no longer in love or emotionally connected to you. When your wife pawns her wedding rings and makes no plans to retrieve them.

It gives me no pleasure to tell you that your marriage is over, but your wife has already demonstrated this. Don’t wait for her to officially lower the boom.

Take back some of your own power. See a lawyer. Take care of your kids. Spend whatever emotional reserves you have left on them. They’re going to need a steady, stable dad.

Dear Amy: Furthering

the discussion of when to stop giving gifts to grandchildren, when my grandkids turn 21 they get a card from me saying, “This is an adult card. All it contains is my love. Love, Grandma.”

— Grandma

Dear Grandma: Well done!

Horoscope

TODAY’S BIRTHDAY: (Nov. 23). You have an instinct for success this year. You envision a desired result and carefully define your aims. You’ll recognize a pattern in January and use what you know to make a timely play. February brings interference from your love life, and the interesting twist invigorates you. You’ll help someone dear in March. Libra and Scorpio people adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 50, 1, 35, 28 and 15.

ARIES: (March 21-April 19). Beware of the slick salesman. This person may not be selling a product so much as selling him or herself. Remarks that sound offhanded and casual could actually be well thought-out and time-tested.

TAURUS: (April 20-May 20). It won’t take courage to move forward, only curiosity. Today the comfort zones, strangely, bring no comfort at all. All the action happens outside the realm of what is known.

GEMINI: (May 21-June 21). Sometimes there’s a calm before the storm. Today there will be a storm before the calm. But you’re ready for a little excitement. When emotions run high, you’ll be at your best.

CANCER: (June 22-July 22). Whatever compels you to make up your mind about what to do or who to be is a positive force. That’s why even a crisis can be a blessing. The Greek word “krisis” means “decision.”

LEO: (July 23-Aug. 22). You’ll achieve an understanding where there hasn’t been one for a long time. This may not be an agreement, but understanding is the first step. Soon the communication will improve even more in this regard.

VIRGO: (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You know where you stand, and those around you know, too. This is no small feat. It takes a strong person to question, decide and declare himself.

LIBRA: (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Not all useful work is satisfying to you. But if you’re doing something that is useful and elegant, too, ideally reflecting your values and aesthetics, you will be most pleased.

SCORPIO: (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You have social savvy. You realize that people need to be heard. Not everything they want is desirable, possible or convenient to you, but you encourage expression anyhow, and this makes all the difference.

SAGITTARIUS: (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). In spite of the bustle and craziness of the world, you’ll feel a human kinship. You’ll regard your fellow travelers as partners, whether they happen to be family, friends, co-workers or strangers.

CAPRICORN: (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You’ll want a change. Maybe this comes out of a sense of frustration or because you’re comparing someone else’s results with yours. You have to ask yourself: Would this change be rational?

AQUARIUS: (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). The walls of a home have absorbed all of the energy generated between them. The walls have stories, and you have a gift for hearing those stories or at least detecting their emotional tone.

PISCES: (Feb. 19-March 20). There’s a risk you’ve been considering for some time now. You’ll finally have the guts to take it. You have everything to gain and nothing to lose. The adventure is on!

Cat-litter tubs can be reused

Dear Readers: You are so creative! So many of you wrote in about reusing cat-litter tubs. Here are a few more of the amazing things you do with them:

- Diane in New Jersey wrote: “Use them to store sand/salt for icy driveways and walkways. They are much easier to carry than the awkward bags that sand and salt come in.”
- Kathleen in Arkansas wrote: “I use them on my deck to store hand tools.”
- Eileen, via email, wrote: “We get our cat litter at a pet and feed store here in California that sells by the pound. We take in our own containers to refill, and it costs a fraction of buying the already-filled tubs.”
- Victoria in Texas wrote: “I use old cat-litter containers as a slow-watering mechanism for trees. Simply use a nail to put five or six holes in the bottom, then fill them with water and place them around the root systems of trees.”

- Sharon, via email, wrote: “I use mine to collect rainwater.”
- Edie in Illinois wrote: “We use them in our greenhouse as supports for shelving. We also use them outdoors as support for our potting-bench shelving.”

Thank you for all the letters and great hints, and I really love the one about buying cat litter at a feed store!

Negative attitude often masks insecurity

Dear Dr. Graham: I don’t know what her problem is, but my oldest sister (who’s almost 70 now) has hardly ever had a good word to say about anyone. What makes some people so critical? My other sisters aren’t like this.

— Mrs. L.V.

Dear Mrs. L.V.: It’s unfortunate that no one apparently tried to help your sister deal with this problem when she was growing up. As time passes, we often become more and more set in our ways — and it becomes harder and harder for us to change. But God still can change her — and I hope you’ll be praying for this to happen.

On the surface, your sister may appear happy — but in my experience, people who are negative and critical toward others usually aren’t very happy at all.

BILLY GRAHAM

One reason is because no one wants to be their friend, for fear they too will be criticized and cut down. A highly critical person also has a hard time loving others and accepting them just as they are. The Bible says that true love “keeps no record of wrongs” (1 Corinthians 13:5).

Why is your sister this way? I don’t know all the reasons, but I do know that people like this often tear others down in order to build themselves up.

In other words, it’s their attempt to convince themselves (and others) that they must be better than anyone else. But this is doomed to failure, and only shows how insecure they are.

Pray for your sister, that she will discover the greatest truth anyone can ever discover — that God loves her, and wants to be her friend. Then ask God to give you an opportunity to confront her — lovingly but clearly — about her attitude toward others.

In addition, let her know you still love her in spite of her negative attitude — and so does Jesus Christ.

Test at home if you have ‘white-coat’ hypertension

Dear Drs. Donohue and Roach: My husband has “white-coat” hypertension in the form of highly elevated blood pressure whenever he goes to the doctor for his routine checkups.

He has a blood pressure monitor at home and checks his blood pressure at least once daily.

The machine was calibrated twice by the doctor and was found to be accurate.

His readings at home are always 120 or less systolic over 80 or less diastolic with the home machine, but can be 160 systolic at the doctor’s office.

DR. DONOHUE

COLUMNIST

Does he need additional medication for his blood pressure?

— D.D.

Dear D.D.: Reactive hypertension — high blood pressure resulting from a situational rather than a medical source — is very common.

When it’s the result of seeing the doctor (the “white coat” part), it can lead to overtreatment if not recognized. You and your husband have done exactly the right thing — bought and tested a home machine, and your husband regularly tests his blood pressure at home.

If the readings at home are consistently good and there are no other signs of poorly controlled blood pressure (the doctor may look at the back of the eyes, listen to the heart, check kidney tests or even get an echocardiogram to look for signs of damage from high blood pressure), then I would not recommend additional medication.

For others in the market for a home machine, home blood pressure cuffs that go around the upper arm, not the wrist or a finger, tend to be the most accurate.

Definitely bring it in to the doctor so that it can be checked for accuracy. More blood pressure measurements mean better information for you and your doctor to decide about treatment.

Dear Drs. Donohue and Roach: My son had a large collection of Matchbox cars from 35 years ago, when lead paint was used. He now has a son of his own. Should the cars be tossed out, or can they be played with once the baby no longer puts everything in his mouth?

Dear L.S.: Matchbox cars, like other cars of that time, were made with lead paint.

According to one source I found, Matchbox stopped using lead paint in 1961. However, you can purchase lead-testing swabs that can answer definitively whether a particular paint has lead in it.

I would not recommend letting small children use old toys that aren’t proven lead-safe or that might have small parts that can come off.

Safety standards are much higher now.

Producers who share in crop risk eligible for assistance loans

A marketing assistance loan is available for producers who share in the risk of producing the crop. To be eligible, a producer must maintain continual beneficial interest in the crop from harvest through the earlier of the date the loan is repaid or Commodity Credit Corporation takes title to the commodity.

Once beneficial interest in a commodity is lost, the commodity is ineligible for loan — even if the producer regains beneficial interest.

Commodity loan eligibility also requires compliance with conservation and wetland protection requirements; beneficial interest requirements, acreage reporting and ensuring that the commodity meets Commodity Credit Corporation minimum grade and quality standards.

PATTI KARN

The quality of the commodity in farm storage must be maintained throughout the term of the loan.

Producers do not have to participate in the Direct and Counter-Cyclical and/or ACRE Programs to be eligible for commodity loans.

Violating provisions of a marketing assistance loan may result in liquidated damages, calling the loan and denial of future farm-stored loans.

If you plan on selling farmland, you should be aware of several consequences associated with FSA programs. For example, if you're planning to sell land that's enrolled in the Conservation Reserve Program, the buyer must agree to continue the enrollment. If the buyer doesn't want to continue the CRP contract, you might have to refund all of the payments you've received to date.

Reviewing program implications with your Henderson County Farm Service Agency staff before completing a sale of farmland is always a prudent precaution.

All producers are reminded that the acreage reporting date for fall seeded crops has changed, beginning with the crop planted for 2013 harvest. The new deadlines are:

Dec. 15, 2012 — Fall barley, fall wheat, and all other fall-seeded small grains

Jan. 15, 2013 — Peaches
Producers should visit the Henderson County FSA office to complete acreage reporting. For questions on this or any FSA program, including specific crop reporting deadlines and planting dates, producers should contact their county FSA office or online at: <http://www.fsa.usda.gov/>.

Ballots for this year's county committee election were mailed to eligible voters on Nov. 5. Voters must complete their ballots and return them to the FSA county office by the close of business on Dec. 3. If mailed, ballots must be postmarked by midnight Dec. 3.

Persons meeting requirements in 1 or 2, plus 3, below, are eligible to vote:

1. Be of legal voting age and have an interest in a farm or ranch as any of the following:
 - An individual
 - The authorized representative of an entity
 - Both spouses when property is owned jointly
 - Spouses in community property states.
2. Is not of legal voting age, but supervises and conducts the farming operations on an entire farm.
3. Participates or cooperates in any FSA program that is provided by law.

Dry weather conditions can affect fall soil samples

Special to The Gleaner

Dry weather conditions this past summer may lead to lower soil pH and potassium levels in fall soil samples.

Measuring the accurate levels of pH and potassium in soil after harvest will provide the proper amount of potassium fertilizer and lime needed in the spring to supplement the soil's nutrients to provide suitable growing conditions.

Lack of rainfall causes the soil to retain salt, which leads to the lower levels of soil pH results. There is approximately one-half of a pH unit difference between fall and spring soil samples. Rainfall is the only way for soil to leach trapped salts. Soil samples collected during dry conditions can produce lower than normal results. Inaccuracy of pH measurements can cause the producer to miscalculate the proper amount of lime needed for the next planting season.

In January 2010, a new method of testing dry fall soils was implemented at the University of Kentucky soil test laboratory.

The previous method for soil sampling required a mixture of one part water and one part soil. The new method replaces water with a high concentration of potassium chloride salt. The high concentration of salt removes seasonal variability because lower than normal results occur during both wet and dry soil conditions. It is okay to test lower than normal results if it is consistent throughout the year. A normal pH is calculated from the lower than normal result.

Lower potassium soil measurement can also result after dry conditions. Potassium levels can range from about 50 to 100 pounds lower per acre. It's predicted that the clay soils don't release potassium until the soil becomes wet.

Unlike the new testing method for pH, there is not currently a method to resolve the lower potassium levels during the dry season.

To get accurate potassium measurements of your soil sample, collect soil after rainfall to obtain optimum results.

Since other labs still use the previous method of utilizing water to measure soil pH, the lower pH measurements can still occur if you submit soil samples to other laboratories. If dry soil samples are sent to a University of Kentucky County Extension Office for testing, the new method used will help generate a proper measurement of pH in the soil.

Gas drilling presents Obama with historic choices

Embracing boom could create more jobs

By KEVIN BEGOS
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Energy companies, environmental groups, and even Hollywood stars are watching to see what decisions President Barack Obama makes about regulating or promoting natural gas drilling.

The stakes are huge. Business leaders don't want government regulations to slow the flow of hundreds of billions of dollars of clean, cheap domestic energy over the next few decades. Environmental groups see that same tide as a potential threat, not just to air and water, but to renewable energy. And on a strategic level, diplomats envision a future when natural gas helps make the U.S. less beholden to imports.

Some say the unexpected drilling boom presents historic options — and risks — for the Obama administration.

"It's a tough choice. The president is in a real bind," said Charles Ebinger, director of the energy security initiative at the Brookings Institution, a Washington, D.C., non-profit. "I think the question is what does he want his legacy to be?"

Ebinger said that if Obama fully embraced the boom in gas drilling the nation could see "incredible" job gains that could lead to "a re-industrialization of America." Possibilities like that are tempting to any president, and perhaps even more so in the current economy.

"But really embracing this stuff is going to bring him squarely in conflict with some of his environmental supporters. It's not without some possible peril, particularly if he gets to be seen too cozy with the oil and gas folks," Ebinger said.

Hydraulic fracturing, or fracking, has made it possible to tap into deep reserves of oil and gas but has also raised concerns about pollution. Large volumes of water, along with sand and hazardous chemicals, are injected underground to break rock apart and free the oil and gas.

Environmental groups and some scientists say there hasn't been enough research on water and air pollution issues. The industry and many federal and state officials say the practice is safe when done properly, and that many rules on air pollution and disclosure of the chemicals used in fracking are being strengthened.

The Sierra Club is already trying to slow the gas rush, which began in Texas and has expanded to Pennsylvania, Colorado and other states. It's started a nationwide "Beyond Natural Gas" campaign to push for more regulation on an industry it describes as "Dirty, Dangerous and Run Amok."

"We need to avoid replacing one set of problems with a new but very different set of problems," said Michael Brune, the Sierra Club's executive director, referring to coal and natural gas. Investing in green energy makes more economic and environmental sense, he said.

The Sierra Club knows natural gas will be a part of the nation's energy future. "How much a part is a big fight right now," Brune said.

Such arguments have resonated with many environmental groups, and with actors and musicians who are lending their star power to anti-drilling efforts.

The Hollywood film

Promised Land is scheduled for release in December, starring Matt Damon, with a story line about drilling from best-selling novelist Dave Eggers. But even before its release, critics pounced on the fact that some financing for the project came from the United Arab Emirates — a country that stands to lose money if the U.S. gets more of its energy needs at home.

Brune agreed that "you have to acknowledge that there are benefits to home-grown energy."

Critics say many states haven't been tough enough on the industry, which has objected to the idea of national drilling regulations. Some state officials oppose such proposals, too.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency is conducting one major national review of drilling and potential drinking water impacts, but it won't be finished until 2014.

Nationally, there were 1.6 million background checks conducted in October initiated through the FBI's National Instant Criminal Background Check System, according to the sports foundation. That was up from 1.3 million background checks in October 2011.

"Both the sales surge in late 2008 and post-2012 election were the result of fears that the president would seek, and Congress would pass, new restrictions on certain types of semi-automatic firearms," Dunn said.

Gun sales spike following Obama's re-election

By Sabina Bhasin
Scripps Howard News Service

Sleeping with a knife under her pillow wasn't enough anymore. Denise Barra needed a gun for protection.

Fearing more stringent gun laws could soon be enacted after the re-election of President Barack Obama, Barra, a single mother of two, stopped by a gun shop to get educated and maybe purchase a new weapon for her bedside table.

"This is a right I have in this country," said Barra, 34, who lives in Naples, Fla. "Why not take advantage of it and be safe and secure in my own home and not rely on calling 911 or the police if God forbid something should happen?"

Government officials say that gun sales and background checks have spiked nationwide since Obama's re-election on Nov. 6. And gun shop owners say they've noticed more women like Barra are purchasing firearms for protection.

"There's quite a big jump from two weeks before versus two weeks after the election," said Eric Sandberg, owner of Centennial Arms in Naples.

"When background checks go up, it's an indicator that sales are going up," said Bill Dunn, managing director of marketing communications at the National Shooting Sports Foundation.

According to the sports foundation, the single biggest day of firearm background checks nationwide was Black Friday last year. "We would not be surprised if Black Friday (this) week eclipsed that record," Dunn said. "Interestingly, the third most active day was Black Friday of 2008, which was just weeks after Barack Obama was first elected president."

Today in history

Associated Press

Today is Friday, Nov. 23, the 328th day of 2012. There are 38 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Nov. 23, 1942, during World War II, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed a measure establishing the U.S. Women's Coast Guard Reserve, or SPARS (an abbreviation of the U.S. Coast Guard motto "Semper Paratus" — "Always Ready").

On this date:

In 1887, actor Boris Karloff was born William Henry Pratt in London.

In 1936, Life, the photojournalism magazine created by Henry R. Luce, was first published.

In 1959, the musical "Fiorello!," starring Tom Bosley as legendary New York Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia, opened on Broadway.

In 1971, the People's Republic of China was seated in the U.N. Security Council.

Ten years ago: President George W. Bush visited Vilnius, Lithuania, and Bucharest, Romania, where he vowed to defend hard-won freedoms behind the former Iron Curtain.

Five years ago: A Canadian cruise ship, the MS Explorer, struck submerged ice off Antarctica and began taking on water, but all 154 passengers and crew took to lifeboats and were plucked to safety by a passing cruise ship.

One year ago: Yemen's authoritarian President Ali Abdullah Saleh agreed to step down amid a fierce uprising to oust him after 33 years in power.

Think about it

"I'm a realist and so I think regretting is a useless occupation. You help no one with it. But you can't live without illusions even if you must fight for them, such as 'love conquers all.' It isn't true, but I would like it to be."

— Marlene Dietrich, German-born actress (1901-1992).

BEST BETS

6 p.m. on HK
Jingle & Bell's Christmas Star

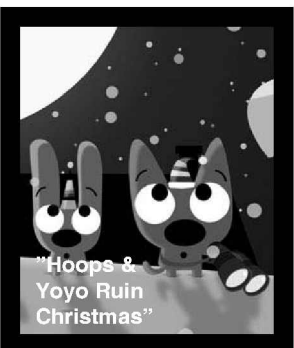

Hallmark Channel's first animated special — done in the style of the classic Rankin/Bass specials — features a performance by Keith Urban and tells the story of Jingle the husky pup and his new friend Bell, as they discover the meaning of Christmas.

8 p.m. on 44
Hoops & Yoyo Ruin Christmas

The mischievous pink kitty and green bunny, who star in their own greeting card line, are the stars of this holiday special, which finds them checking out Santa's sleigh during his stop at their house. They can't get out before he takes off again, so they go along for the ride, falling through a wormhole and back into a time before Santa was Santa. They've got to act fast to get St. Nick — and Christmas — back on track.

8 p.m. on 19
The Happy Elf

Harry Connick Jr. wrote two songs for this special and also voices the narrator, a 3-D animated look-alike called Lil' Farley. The title character is Eubie, a Claus subordinate whose eternal cheerfulness is driving everyone at the North Pole nuts. Assigned to recheck Santa's naughty and nice lists, he finds a disturbing pattern of naughtiness in a place called Bluesville and sets out to adjust some attitudes in this down town.

8 p.m. on 9
The Mind of a Chef

A quartet of new episodes opens with "Simple," which finds David Chang abandoning complex cooking techniques to "leave the flavor alone." Also featured are beets prepared by chef Daniel Patterson. Subsequent episodes feature foie gras, a whiskey tasting, eggs and Japanese cuisine.

8 p.m. on AP
Raised Wild

In this new episode, Dr. Ochota visits Ukraine in search of the truth behind the story of a girl named Oksana Malaya, who turned to dogs for the warmth and love her alcoholic parents couldn't provide. Years later, video footage captured her acting more canine than human. Dr. Ochota hopes to separate the facts from the myths surrounding Oksana and, if possible, to meet her in "Dog Girl of Ukraine."

8:30 p.m. on 44
It's a SpongeBob Christmas!

Christmas is in jeopardy in SpongeBob SquarePants' undersea home, Bikini Bottom, in this new special, which finds Plankton, Mr. Krabs' nemesis, using a fruitcake laced with "jerkonium" to turn everyone bad in pursuit of his own holiday wish: the secret recipe for Krabby Patties. John Goodman voices Santa in the special, which was inspired by the song "Don't Be a Jerk, It's Christmas," co-written by Tom Kenny, the voice of SpongeBob.

9 p.m. on 35
Paul McCartney: In Performance at the White House

Paul McCartney accepts the prestigious Gershwin Prize for Popular Song in a music-filled special hosted by President and Mrs. Barack Obama. The program includes performances by the former Beatle, as well as Stevie Wonder, Elvis Costello, Herbie Hancock, Corinne Bailey Rae, Dave Grohl, the Jonas Brothers. Faith Hill, Emmylou Harris, Lang Lang and Jack White.

9 p.m. on AP
Raised Wild

For centuries, tales of human beings raised by wild beasts have infiltrated our culture, but amid the folk tales and grand fictions, there remain the odd, horrible true stories. In this new series, anthropologist Dr. Mary-Ann Ochota treks everywhere, from the Ugandan jungle to rural Ukraine to increase her — and our — understanding of feral children.

9 p.m. on B
Eddie Murphy: One Night Only

This new special celebrates the career of comic icon Eddie Murphy in a tribute at the Saban Theatre in Los Angeles featuring appearances by some of Murphy's TV and film co-stars over the years. The event marks 30 years since his groundbreaking "Delirious" stand-up concert film and his breakthrough film role in "48 HRS." The two-hour show will also include short films, musical performances and sketch comedy and will culminate in an appearance by Murphy.

9 p.m. on D
Movie: Mr. Deeds

Adam Sandler reworks the film classic "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" to fit his comedic persona in this 2002 update. He plays a bumpkin who inherits a media empire and leaves his pizza parlor to assume a more lavish lifestyle. Of course, there are people determined to get him out of the picture as quickly as possible. Winona Ryder appears as a TV reporter who wants to do a story on him; John Turturro is a riot as Deeds' new manservant.

9:20 p.m. on B
Movie: Batman Returns

Some sequels get it right — like this one. Michael Keaton returns to the batcave as the Caped Crusader in this 1992 Tim Burton film. This time, the Dark Knight must save Gotham City from being taken over by three villains: the maniacal Penguin (Danny DeVito), the seductive Catwoman (Michelle Pfeiffer) and the scheming Max Shreck (Christopher Walken). Michael Gough also stars.
